ABSTRACT

Reforms of the Irish justice system have continued. A new draft law on judicial appointments and promotions, which proposes to establish a Judicial Appointments Commission, was tabled in Parliament. The draft law limits the level of discretion of the Government in the appointment procedure, however the fact that the proposed Commission does not consist of a clear majority of judges chosen by their peers raises concerns. The Judicial Council adopted guidelines for the judiciary on conduct and ethics, where the role and discretion retained by Parliament on the removal of judges could raise concerns about the potential politicisation of the process. The Attorney General introduced a scheme to provide legal representation to judges in case of misconduct, which is a positive development to strengthen judicial independence. Additional judicial posts have been filled in the High Court, while the number of judges per inhabitant remains low. High litigation costs and shortcomings within the legal aid system continue to raise concerns, however, work is ongoing to address those challenges. The digitalisation of justice has progressed with the adoption of ICT and Data Strategies. Work on the review of the Offences Against the State Act relating to the Special Criminal Court has continued. A draft law establishing a compensation scheme for cases of excessive length of court proceedings has been proposed.

Ireland continues to review its national anti-corruption structure and strategy. The development of the multi-annual National Strategy and Action Plan to Combat Economic Crime and Corruption has been affected by delays in establishing a permanent Advisory Council. A new criminal procedural act entered in force in 2021 and should make dealing with complex offences – including corruption – more efficient, but further reforms are needed to strengthen the fight against corruption. A review of the ethics legislative framework has started and includes addressing weaknesses in the asset disclosure legislation. The review also aims at reinforcing the capacity of the Standards in Public Office Commission, which currently lacks any enforcement powers in most areas related to its mandate. Legislation on whistleblowing is being discussed in Parliament and is expected to be approved during the first half of 2022. As regards prosecution and investigation of corruption, cooperation between relevant authorities is good. In addition, resources in the prosecution of corruption begun to be reinforced, while the number of cases detected and investigated continues to increase.

Ireland is finalising a legislative overhaul of its media law undertaken in the context of transposing the revised Audiovisual Media Services Directive. Authorities have taken steps to mitigate the financial burden on media outlets caused by the pandemic and public information campaigns on the COVID-19 pandemic have played a role in supporting the viability of media outlets. Although recent figures show an even split of state advertising spending across national and regional media outlets, the lack of specific rules regarding the allocation of state advertising funds hinders the transparency of the process. The professional environment for journalists is largely safe and the ongoing reform of the defamation rules is expected to have a positive impact on the work of journalists.

Following discussions related to the consideration of new bills, new working methods have been adopted to improve the management of business in Parliament. The Irish Human Rights and Equality Commission has been re-accredited A status and received further funding. Ireland has a vibrant and diverse civil society, but a reform on the Electoral Act has not addressed concerns regarding legal obstacles for the funding of Civil Society Organisations.

RECOMMENDATIONS

It is recommended to Ireland to:

- Ensure that the reform of the appointment and promotion of judges, as regards the composition of the Judicial Appointment Commission, is taking into account European standards on judicial appointments.
- Continue actions aimed at reducing litigation costs to ensure effective access to justice, taking into account European standards on disproportionate costs of litigation and their impact on access to courts.
- Strengthen the existing ethics framework, including on codes of conduct, asset declarations, revolving doors and lobbying, and in particular as regards the monitoring and enforcement capacity of the Standards in Public Office Commission.
- Continue the reform of the Defamation Act to improve the professional environment for journalists taking into account European standards on the protection of journalists.
- Take measures to address legal obstacles related to access to funding for civil society organisations.

I. JUSTICE SYSTEM

Ireland is a common law jurisdiction, whose judiciary is divided into a civil and a criminal branch. The court system comprises a court of final appeal (the Supreme Court), a Court of Appeal, and courts of first instance which include a High Court with full jurisdiction in all criminal and civil matters and courts of limited jurisdiction: the Circuit Court and the District Court organised on a geographical basis. The Special Criminal Courts<sup>1</sup> are non-jury courts and deal with paramilitary, subversive and organised crime cases. Moreover, a number of specialised tribunals<sup>2</sup> operate in different areas. A Judicial Council<sup>3</sup> was established in 2019. Judicial appointments are made by the President of Ireland, acting on the advice of the Government. The Judicial Appointments Advisory Board (JAAB) is tasked with the selection of suitable candidates for appointment. The prosecution service is not part of the judicial branch. The Attorney General is the legal adviser to the Government. The legal profession has two types of lawyers – solicitors, represented by the Law Society, and barristers, largely represented by the Bar of Ireland. The Legal Services Regulatory Authority, an independent body established in 2016, is Ireland’s national statutory regulator for both branches of the legal profession.

Independence

The level of perceived judicial independence in Ireland continues to be high among the general public and very high among companies. Overall, 73% of the general population and 77% of companies perceive the level of independence of courts and judges to be ‘fairly or very good’ in 2022<sup>4</sup>. According to data in the 2022 EU Justice Scoreboard, the level has remained consistently high for the general public and very high for companies since 2016. The perceived judicial independence among the general public remains at the same level than in 2021. The perceived judicial independence among companies has slightly increased since 2021 (76%), but is lower in comparison with 2016 (79%).

<sup>1</sup> The Offences Against the State Act 1939 provides for the establishment of Special Criminal Courts. A Special Criminal Court now known as Special Criminal Court No. 1 is operating since 1972. Special Criminal Court No. 2 was established and is operating since 2016. A Special Criminal Court sits with three Judges and no jury. The Government appoints a panel of High Court, Circuit Court and District Court Judges to sit in the Special Criminal Courts. There are currently nineteen judges on the panel. Cases involving terrorism and organised crime offences are automatically brought before a Special Criminal Court for trial. Other offences are brought before or sent for trial when the Director of Public Prosecutions certifies that the ordinary Courts are inadequate to secure the effective administration of justice and the preservation of public peace and order. An appeal against a conviction or sentence by the Special Criminal Courts can be brought to the Court of Appeal.

<sup>2</sup> Including a Labour Court, which has sole appellate jurisdiction in all disputes under employment rights enactments. While the Labour Court is not a court of law, when exercising this jurisdiction the Labour Court is involved in the administration of justice. The Court also carries a jurisdiction under the Industrial Relations Acts 1946 – 2015. In exercise of that jurisdiction it operates as an industrial relations tribunal, hearing both sides in a case and then issuing a Recommendation setting out its opinion on the dispute and the terms on which it should be settled. Recommendations made by the Court concerning the investigation of disputes under the Industrial Relations Acts 1946 – 2015 are not binding on the parties concerned. The Court’s determinations under the Employment Rights enactments are legally binding.

<sup>3</sup> The main functions of the Judicial Council are to consider complaints in relation to judicial misconduct, to ensure the continuous education and training of judges and to draft guidelines on certain issues including personal injuries’ damages.

<sup>4</sup> Figures 50 and 52, 2022 EU Justice Scoreboard. The level of perceived judicial independence is categorised as follows: very low (below 30% of respondents perceive judicial independence as fairly good and very good); low (between 30-39%), average (between 40-59%), high (between 60-75%), very high (above 75%).

The composition of the envisaged Judicial Appointments Commission proposed in the Judicial Appointments Bill raises some concerns. On 8 April 2022, the Government tabled a draft law in Parliament on the appointment and promotion of judges<sup>5</sup>. It provides for the establishment of a Judicial Appointments Commission composed of nine members to replace the current JAAB<sup>6</sup>. The Commission would be chaired by the Chief Justice and would have three judicial members<sup>7</sup> and four lay members<sup>8</sup>, as well as the Attorney General in a non-voting capacity. This will lead to a total of eight voting members – four judicial and four lay persons. The draft law has incorporated some provisions following the consultations with stakeholders, such as unifying the procedure for appointments and promotions. The draft law also includes additional guarantees to limit the level of discretion of the Government in the appointment procedure. In particular, the draft law provides that the Commission would present three candidates to the Government, and two additional recommendations for a second and additional vacancies. In addition, the Government shall, in nominating a person for appointment or election to a judicial office, consider for nomination only those persons who have been recommended by the Commission. Therefore, this system better limits the discretion of the Government compared to both the current system of a list of seven candidates<sup>9</sup> and the system envisaged in the General Scheme<sup>10</sup> of five unranked candidates. However, as already reflected in the 2021 Rule of Law Report<sup>11</sup>, the composition of the envisaged Commission<sup>12</sup> does not provide for a clear majority of judges chosen by their peers<sup>13</sup>. In addition, the fact that the Attorney General would sit on the Commission in an ex-officio non-voting capacity was considered a concern by stakeholders<sup>14</sup>. It is important that the final reform approved in Parliament guarantees judicial independence, in line with EU law and taking into account European standards<sup>15</sup>.

<sup>12</sup> However, the composition of the envisaged Commission can be considered as an improvement compared to the composition foreseen in the draft law tabled in 2017 (which lapsed with the end of the previous parliamentary term) and which had a lay majority and a lay chairperson.

<sup>14</sup> 2021 Rule of Law Report, Country Chapter on the rule of law situation in Ireland, p. 4. The Human Rights and Equality Commission and the Law Society raised concerns as regards the independence of the Commission from the Government, as the Attorney General is also the Government’s chief legal advisor and sits at cabinet meetings.

In this context, the Government of Ireland has pointed out that the Attorney General is a constitutional Office Holder who has a particular role in upholding the independence of the Judiciary, and the draft law, in all its elements, including in particular those relating to the composition of the Commission and notably its inclusion of a substantial number of judges and an equal number of lay persons, was drafted on the basis of careful legal considerations and will serve to strongly underpin the independence of the Judicial Appointments Commission.

<sup>15</sup> Recommendation CM/Rec(2010)12 of the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe, paras 46- 47. The European Court of Justice has, in the context of judicial appointments made by the executive branch with the involvement of a Judicial Appointments Committee, indicated that for such Committee to contribute to

The Judicial Council has adopted conduct and ethics guidelines for judges. On 4 February 2022, the Judicial Council approved guidelines on conduct and ethics<sup>16</sup> for the judiciary. The guidelines had been prepared by the Judicial Conduct Committee of the Judicial Council and were approved unanimously by the 167 members of the Council. The guidelines are structured in line with the principles of the 2002 United Nations Judicial Group on Strengthening Judicial Integrity, the so-called ‘Bangalore Principles’: judicial independence, impartiality, integrity, equality, propriety, competence and diligence, and equality. They provide the framework for a detailed judicial misconduct complaints procedure as outlined in the Judicial Council Act 2019. However, Parliament remains in charge of deciding on the removal of judges from office and retains its margin of discretion in that regard<sup>17</sup>. As reflected in the 2021 Rule of Law Report<sup>18</sup>, this could raise concerns about the potential politicisation of the process, even if this process has so far never been engaged<sup>19</sup>.

A scheme has been set up offering the possibility of legal representation by the Chief State Solicitor to judges in case of misconduct. In February 2022, the Attorney General introduced a protocol to specify the procedure and arrangements for the provision of legal representation to a judge in respect of a complaint before the Judicial Conduct Committee. The protocol was introduced to safeguard the independence of the judiciary and to ensure judges have available legal representation in relation to any allegations of judicial misconduct. The protocol indicates that in case of complaints, judges shall be entitled to legal representation by the Office of the Chief State Solicitor<sup>20</sup>; in particular, a panel of six senior and six junior counsels is set up for the implementation of the protocol. All costs related to such legal representation shall be borne by the Office of the Chief State Solicitor. Judges remain free to seek legal representation outside the arrangements of the protocol. The European Association of Judges has considered this scheme to have a positive impact on the independence of judges in Ireland<sup>21</sup>.

The regime of incompatibilities of the Attorney General could be further strengthened. Under the Irish Constitution<sup>22</sup>, the Attorney General is the legal adviser to the Government but is not a member of Government<sup>23</sup>. There are no rules in place related to temporary employment of the Attorney General which may be incompatible with the exercise of their functions. However, some legal guarantees exist. With the permission of the Government, it may be that a newly appointed Attorney General has existing legal commitments that must be completed in order to discharge professional obligations<sup>24</sup>. In addition, the Attorney General is subject to a legal requirement to publicly disclose material conflicts of interest and to verify that taxes <sup>23</sup> The Attorney General has limited prosecution responsibilities. Those responsibilities are mostly held by the Director of Public Prosecutions. According to the Ministers and Secretaries Act 1924, section 6(2), an Attorney General may also be elected to be a member of the Parliament.

are compliant. The Attorney General has also to comply with Prevention of Corruption legislation and has ongoing ethical and professional obligations as a practising (court advocate) barrister. Traditionally, Attorneys General have been practising court advocates (barristers) prior to appointment and in instances where a conflict of interest or a perceived conflict of interest arises in relating to existing State legal files or new files that arise during the term of office of an Attorney General (for example, where an Attorney General may have prior to appointment advised a person involved in litigation against the State), the practice is for Attorneys General to recuse themselves from the relevant file. Though long-established, these situations related to the regime of incompatibilities of the Attorney General may affect perceptions of their independence.

Quality

The number of judges in the High Court has been increased, while the number of judges per inhabitant in Ireland remains low. In November 2021, Parliament approved a proposal by the Government<sup>25</sup> to fill five additional posts in the High Court<sup>26</sup>. However, the President of the High Court has stated that even more judges are needed to deal with the backlog of cases caused by the pandemic<sup>27</sup>. In addition, the number of judges per inhabitant remains the lowest of the EU<sup>28</sup>. The report of the Judicial Planning Working Group set up by the Government<sup>29</sup> to consider the number and type of judges required to ensure the efficient administration of justice over the next 5 years is expected to be published in October 2022. Moreover, the Government requested the OECD to undertake an independent research to make a comparative analysis of the number of judges with other OECD countries. The findings of this research will be used as an evidential base to support the deliberations of the Working Group recommendations.

The Government continues to work to address existing concerns in relation to litigation costs and the legal aid system. Following a review of the Administration of Civil Justice in 2020<sup>30</sup>, concerns have remained in relation to the litigation costs in Ireland<sup>31</sup>. The Minister for Justice stated in October 2021 that legal costs in Ireland are prohibitive and act as a barrier to people exercising their rights before the courts<sup>32</sup>. The lack of predictability of costs is particularly problematic for victimless claims, such as environmental claims<sup>33</sup>, where litigants are not aiming to gain an economic benefit from their legal action, but act in the public interest. It has been pointed out<sup>34</sup> that the issue is also aggravated due to the limited range of possibilities for alternative dispute resolution in Ireland<sup>35</sup>. A Working Group on costs of litigation is carrying out an economic analysis of models or approaches to reducing litigation costs and it is expected to publish its findings in June 2022. This is important, as European standards provide that disproportionate high costs can limit the access to a court of citizens<sup>36</sup>. In relation to legal aid, the Civil Legal Aid Bill 2021<sup>37</sup> is progressing through Parliament. In addition, a General Scheme of a Criminal Legal Aid Bill is being prepared, which aims to transfer the administration of the Criminal Legal Aid Scheme to the Legal Aid Board. Stakeholders have raised concerns that cuts on legal aid fees imposed since 2008 are still in force, discouraging barristers from pursuing a career at the Bar in criminal practice, threatening the criminal justice system<sup>38</sup>.

The development of digital solutions, as planned in new digital justice strategies, will enhance the digitalisation of justice, including the use of digital technology by courts. In October 2021, the Courts Service<sup>39</sup> published the ICT Strategy 2021-2024<sup>40</sup>. The strategy identifies 6 key themes and 42 actions, targeting improvements in areas such as court technology and digital case management, as well as desktop and infrastructure enhancements, ICT security and resilience, and ICT governance. The ICT Strategy was complemented in December 2021 with a Data Strategy<sup>41</sup>, aimed at strengthening existing data governance and data security processes. These strategies may contribute to remedy existing gaps in the digitalisation of justice. In particular, Ireland scores below the EU average on the use of digital technology by courts<sup>42</sup>, electronic communication tools in courts<sup>43</sup>, digital solutions to conduct and follow court proceedings in criminal cases<sup>44</sup> and procedural rules that allow digital technology in court cases<sup>45</sup>. It is also important that the digitalisation of the Irish justice system allows for the gathering of data on the length of proceedings.

Work on the review of the Offences Against the State Acts continues. The Group to review the Offences Against the State Acts, set up in February 2021, has continued its work. The Group was set up following calls from the United Nations and civil society for considering either the abolition of the Special Criminal Court, which was established in 1972 to deal with terrorism and organised crime cases, or to strengthen the procedure of the Court to ensure respect of the right to fair trial<sup>46</sup>. The Group submitted an interim report to the Minister for Justice in August 2021<sup>47</sup>.

Efficiency

The length of court proceedings is not systemically assessed. There is no system to regularly evaluate the court performance based on defined indicators. Therefore, there is no information on the length of proceedings provided in the Justice Scoreboard<sup>48</sup>, with the exception of the rate of resolving litigious civil and commercial cases, which is one of the lowest in the EU<sup>49</sup>. Some information is available in annual reports from the Court Service. Those reports show that the average length of proceedings in the High Court in 2020 was 660 days, a decrease of around 125 days from 2019<sup>50</sup>. However, the average length of proceedings for criminal cases regarding summary offences slightly increased (by around 33 days in comparison with 2019)<sup>51</sup>. The length of proceedings at the Court of Appeal has significantly decreased both for civil cases (from 1220 days in 2019 to 579 days in 2020) and criminal cases (from 705 days in 2019 to 371 days in 2020)<sup>52</sup>. The average length of proceedings in the Supreme Court has also decreased, but remains very high (2513 days in 2020). It would be important that data on the length of proceedings is systematically recorded in line with the methodology of the Council of Europe European Commission for the efficiency of justice<sup>53</sup>.

The Government has proposed a compensation scheme for cases of excessive length of court proceedings. Legislation establishing a compensation scheme to award damages in the event of protracted court proceedings is a long-pending requirement by a European Court of Human Rights ('ECtHR') judgment from 2010<sup>54</sup>. The Government approved the General Scheme establishing a compensation scheme for cases of excessive length of court proceedings<sup>55</sup> on 21 July 2021. Its main aim is to provide for the establishment of an independent Assessment Board to assess claims for delay in court proceedings at first instance and to award compensation, if appropriate. The General Scheme also provides for the procedures to be followed by the Board and the criteria by which claims and compensation are to be assessed, by reference to the criteria and principles applied by the European Court of Human Rights in delay cases.

II. ANTI-CORRUPTION FRAMEWORK

The responsibility to fight against and prevent corruption in Ireland falls under the control of several public authorities. The national police (An Garda Síochána), specifically, the Garda National Economic Crime Bureau (GNECB)<sup>56</sup>, investigates and prevents corruption. The GNECB has a specialised Anti-Bribery & Corruption Unit that oversees the investigation of bribery and corruption at national level. Within the national police, the Garda Anti-Corruption Unit (GACU) is responsible for promoting integrity as well as detecting and investigating corruption. The Garda Síochána Ombudsman Commission (GSOC) investigates cases of misconduct of the national police affecting the public interest<sup>57</sup>. The Standards in Public Office Commission (SIPO) continues overseeing the integrity framework for public officials including conflicts of interest, lobbying and party financing where it also provides advice to office holders<sup>58</sup>.

The perception of public sector corruption among experts and business executives is that the level of corruption in the public sector remains relatively low. In the 2021 Corruption Perceptions Index by Transparency International, Ireland scores 74/100 and ranks 6th in the European Union and 13th globally<sup>59</sup>. This perception has been relatively stable<sup>60</sup> over the past 5 years. The 2022 Special Eurobarometer on Corruption shows that 59% of respondents consider corruption widespread in their country (EU average 68%) and 16% of respondents feel personally affected by corruption in their daily lives (EU average 24%)<sup>61</sup>. As regards businesses, 28% of companies consider that corruption is widespread (EU average 63%) and 7% consider that that corruption is a problem when doing business (EU average 34%)<sup>62</sup>. Furthermore, 32% of respondents find that there are enough successful prosecutions to deter people from corrupt practices (EU average 34%)<sup>63</sup>, while 26% of companies believe that people and businesses caught for bribing a senior official are appropriately punished (EU average 29%)<sup>64</sup>.

The Government’s plan to review the national anti-corruption structure and strategy is progressing slowly. Following up on the so-called 2020 “Hamilton review”<sup>65</sup>, the Government published a plan for implementing the review’s recommendations<sup>66</sup>. One of the commitments was the establishment of a permanent Advisory Council, which was set-up with some delay in May 2022<sup>67</sup>. The Council will be composed of a Chairperson and six representatives from the business and financial sectors, academia and civil society. The Advisory Council will be responsible for the strategic and policy response to corruption and for coordinating the draft of the anti-corruption strategy<sup>68</sup>. Its delayed establishment has adversely affected the development of the multi-annual National Strategy and Action Plan to Combat Economic Crime and Corruption. Once the Advisory Council becomes operational, the drafting of the strategy will start. The draft is expected to be ready in 2023<sup>69</sup>. Additionally, a permanent forum of senior representatives from various investigative agencies, established in June 2021<sup>70</sup>, contributes to the operationalisation of the strategic approach to fight corruption, enhancing cooperation and providing a channel for information exchange<sup>71</sup>. The forum provides investigators of corruption with access to joint training programmes<sup>72</sup> and is currently collecting information to identify legislative gaps related to the sharing of information, among other legislative proposals<sup>73</sup>. Further reforms envisaged in the implementation plan, such as the revision of the ethics framework in public office or the resourcing of specialised bodies, are still pending, with so far no further steps being noted.

The level of perceived corruption is categorised as follows: low (the perception among experts and business executives of public sector corruption scores above 79); relatively low (scores between 79-60), relatively high (scores between 59-50), high (scores below 50).

<sup>60</sup> In 2017 the score was 74, while, in 2021, the score is 74. The score significantly increases/decreases when it changes more than five points; improves/deteriorates (changes between 4-5 points); is relatively stable (changes from 1-3 points) in the last 5 years.

While there is a comprehensive criminal legal framework addressing corruption and bribery, further reforms could strengthen the fight against corruption. The 2018 Criminal Justice Act provides for the criminalisation of an extensive range of corruption-related offences, including foreign bribery, and establishes deterrent sanctions including sentences of up to 10 years and unlimited fines upon final conviction<sup>74</sup>. Following the Hamilton review<sup>75</sup>, the Department of Justice has continued working on the implementation of the legislative priorities highlighted in last year's Rule of Law Report<sup>76</sup>. The new Criminal Procedure Act 2021<sup>77</sup> entered into force in February 2022<sup>78</sup>. The Act introduces preliminary trial hearings to prepare the parties ahead of trials<sup>79</sup>, and aims to bring efficiency to processes dealing with complex criminal offences such as white-collar crimes<sup>80</sup>. Also, some key legislative revisions planned by the Government<sup>81</sup>, still remain unaddressed and require further attention<sup>82</sup>. These relate to the inclusion of bid-rigging offences in competition law and public procurement rules, and to the reinforcement of the ethics framework to address the issue of misconduct of former members of Parliament and public office holders<sup>83</sup>.

Cooperation within and between police and prosecution has proven effective in investigating and prosecuting corruption. The investigation of corruption offences is a shared task within the national police, including the GNECB and its specialised Anti-Bribery & Corruption Unit. In addition, Ireland has recently established a dedicated anti-corruption unit within the national police, the GACU, to investigate and prevent corruption inside the police, but no cases of wrongdoing have been reported yet<sup>84</sup>. The GACU is led by a Chief Superintendent who has two Detective Superintendents and 23 police officers of other ranks reporting to her<sup>85</sup>. This special unit includes an integrity section to encourage ethical behaviour and professionalism across the national police<sup>86</sup>. The prosecution of corruption offences remains under the control of the Office of the Director of Public Prosecutions (ODPP) and its Special Financial Crime Unit that deals with cases of high complexity<sup>87</sup>. However, the national police can exercise prosecution powers for summary trial in the District Court delegated from the ODPP for certain low-level offences, including theft, handling and forgery offences. This does not include corruption offences<sup>88</sup>. In these cases, it is for the national police to deliberate on the prosecution, subject to parameters and legal guarantees set out in General Directives

<sup>79</sup> Issues that can be dealt with at the preliminary trial hearings include disclosure, availability of witnesses, necessity of particular practical measures or technological equipment, length of the trial, severance of Indictments, additional jurors, agreement of evidence, special measures for vulnerable witnesses, admissibility of evidence.

However, the bill has been heavily criticised by stakeholders and members of Parliament, and it remains unclear if it will be proceeded in Parliament.

Resources assigned to the investigation and prosecution of corruption have increased; meanwhile the number of cases detected and investigated continues to grow. The Government has acted upon the critical resources situation within the Prosecutor's Office<sup>92</sup> as the workload continued to increase in 2021<sup>93</sup>. The ODPP has confirmed the increase of staff with 35 new posts, bringing the total to 260<sup>94</sup>. This allocation is for the entire Office and not limited to corruption offences. Not all posts have been filled or assigned yet<sup>95</sup>. Currently, there are three legal staff in the Special Financial Crime Unit of the Prosecutors Office. This Unit's purpose is to handle a small number of strategically important financial cases, including some corruption cases.<sup>96</sup> While there has been an increase in staff in the police, with 22 new staff members assigned to the GNECB since last year, resources remain insufficient to effectively handle corruption cases<sup>97</sup>. The national police is currently developing a strategic long-term plan for resourcing the GNECB, but it remains unclear if its specialised Anti-Bribery & Corruption Unit will be allocated additional staff<sup>98</sup>.

The Government is reviewing the ethics legislative framework with the intention to present a legislative proposal for reform by the end of this year. Rules on conflicts of interest national vs. local government level are not harmonised in Ireland<sup>99</sup>. As reported last year, a legislative priority for the Government<sup>100</sup> is the consolidation and strengthening of the legal framework to prevent conflicts of interest in public office<sup>101</sup>. The Minister for Public Expenditure and Reform is currently assessing the results of the public consultation, which closed in January 2022<sup>102</sup>. The outcome of the consultation highlights the need for harmonised ethics rules and raises concerns regarding the limited investigative capacity and lack of enforcement powers of the Standards in Public Office Commission (SIPO)<sup>103</sup>. The review aims to consolidate the integrity regime for public officials. Its point of departure is the draft 2015 Public Sector Standards Bill<sup>104</sup>, which could not be agreed before the dissolution of the Parliament in 2020<sup>105</sup>. The review also aims to provide legal solutions to cases of misconduct in public office, particularly by former members of Parliament<sup>106</sup>. While the outcome of the review will be available during the course of summer 2022, the Government will not present the reform proposal until later this year<sup>107</sup>. The current integrity framework provides a legislative basis for codes of conduct for office holders, civil servants, and members of Parliament<sup>108</sup>. However, separate integrity regimes at national and local level generate confusion as to what ethic requirements should apply to public officials<sup>109</sup>. The SIPO continues monitoring the codes and providing ethics trainings but lacks enforcement powers<sup>110</sup>. SIPO's investigations in case of misconduct are accessible to the public and followed by an assessment report and press release<sup>111</sup>.

<sup>110</sup> SIPO considers that the current ethics legislation should be re-considered in its entirety to provide for a more robust regulatory framework. In particular, SIPO considers that the legislation governing its work should be strengthened in order to give it powers to impose sanctions as opposed to being limited to making recommendations. See Department of Justice (2021), A Review of Structures and Strategies to Prevent, Investigate and Penalise Economic Crime and Corruption Implementation Plan, April 2021, p. 3 and Standards in Public Office Commission (2021), 2020 Annual Report, p. 13. In addition, the outgoing Head of Ethics and Lobbying Regulation said in media that 'the biggest challenge she had faced in her seven-year term at the Standards in Public Office Commission (SIPO) was the view that ethics was "a once-a-year, fill-in-a-form" exercise'. See Independent (2022), No gifts of more than €100 and no hiring family members when you are a politician or senior public official, says ethics boss.

Asset disclosure obligations remain incomplete and are currently being reviewed. Rules on asset and interest declarations apply to public office holders<sup>112</sup>, members of Parliament and civil servants under the Ethic Acts<sup>113</sup>. However, only members of Parliament are required to publicly disclose their interests and present annual statements to SIPO<sup>114</sup>. As reported in several instances, the material scope of declarations remains limited, as they do not cover significant liabilities and/or financial and economic involvements<sup>115</sup>. As mentioned above, the Government is committed to review the ethics legislative framework, including the asset declaration regime, with work continuing during 2022, including as regards the enforcement powers of the SIPO<sup>116</sup>. Reform will cover systematic disclosure of actual and potential conflicts of interest<sup>117</sup>.

SIPO continues to investigate potential breaches of the 2015 Lobbying Act. Ireland's legal framework on lobbying provides for a comprehensive set of rules<sup>118</sup>. The 2015 Lobbying Act<sup>119</sup> and its two statutory reviews ensure a degree of transparency in the activity of lobbying with a mandatory register for interest representatives, which consists of a public web-based system subjected to SIPO's oversight<sup>120</sup>. The 2015 Lobbying Act also provides a one-year cooling off period. However, there are currently no enforcement provisions associated with the post-employment restrictions<sup>121</sup>. The third statutory review of the Act is legally required to start by 1 September 2022<sup>122</sup>, SIPO has indicated it could repeat some recommendations, including introducing sanctions for breaches of the Act with penalties of up to EUR 15.000 and a prohibition to lobby for 2 years<sup>123</sup>. As reported last year, SIPO has a number of powers to sanction non-compliance<sup>124</sup> with the Act by designated public officials<sup>125</sup>. As regards compliance with transparency in lobbying requirements, SIPO reported three investigations initiated during 2020 as well as the prosecution of four cases with one case remaining before court by end 2020 and two in which compliance was achieved prior to a verdict<sup>126</sup>.

Obligations on lobbyists include registration and to provide information regularly about their lobbying activities, including, in the case of professional lobbyists, information about their clients. <sup>121</sup> In September 2020, the Taoiseach announced in Dáil Éireann that section 22 of the Act, concerning restrictions on post-term employment as a lobbyist, should be reviewed. Subsequently, the Minister for Public Expenditure and Reform directed that the review be expanded to include a study of the recommendations made by the Commission to both previous reviews, as well as the question of lobbying of relevant persons while they are outside of the State and issues raised in two Private Members' Bills.

The Protected Disclosures (Amendment) Bill 2022 is at an advanced stage in the legislative process and is expected to be enacted in mid July 2022. It aims at transposing the EU Whistleblowing Directive into Irish law. In particular, it extends the scope of the legislation to include volunteers, shareholders, persons belonging to the administrative, management or supervisory body of an undertaking, and those whose work based relationship is yet to begin.<sup>127</sup> The Government has increased financial support to Transparency International Ireland (TII) to operate a “Speak Up” helpline and a legal advice centre that offers information and advice to support whistleblowers and potential whistleblowers. TII has also been nominated to receive protected disclosures from Garda personnel on suspected corruption.

The GNECB is carrying out special investigations into corruption and fraud involving the new COVID-19 Pandemic Unemployment Payment. Cases of alleged COVID-related fraud and corruption are under investigation by the GNECB, in particular in high-risk sectors including public procurement and health<sup>128</sup>. A number of Suspicious Transaction Reports (STRs) have been submitted by financial institutions alleging COVID-related fraud in areas such as the COVID-19 Pandemic Unemployment Payment and procurement of personal protective equipment. These STRs are received by the Financial Intelligence Unit Ireland which analyses and disseminates them if necessary<sup>129</sup>.

III. MEDIA PLURALISM AND MEDIA FREEDOM

In Ireland, the legal framework concerning media pluralism is in the Constitution, which requires the State to guarantee the exercise of fundamental rights, including freedom of expression and freedom of the press<sup>130</sup>. A well-established self-regulatory framework based on the Office of the Press Ombudsman and the Press Council of Ireland enables the public opinion to hold to account editors and journalists<sup>131</sup>. In the context of the ongoing transposition of the revised Audiovisual Media Services Directive, a number of regulatory steps have been taken to put the Irish media framework on a sustainable foot with the changes affecting the media landscape in the recent years<sup>132</sup>.

<sup>124</sup> For example, SIPO can issue fixed payment notices of EUR 200 for the late submission of lobbying returns and can also prosecute individuals summarily for contravening a number of relevant contraventions as set out in the legislation.

<sup>132</sup> However, the laws transposing the Audiovisual Media Services Directive are not in place yet, and on 19 May 2022, the Commission decided to refer Ireland to the Court of Justice of the European Union over its failure to transpose the Directive, INFR 2020/0531; European Commission (2022) Audiovisual Media Services Directive: Commission refers five Member States to the Court of Justice of the EU. Ireland ranks 6th in the 2022 Reporters without Borders World Press Freedom Index compared to 12th in the previous year.

Preparatory work is ongoing for the establishment of a new media regulatory authority. As referred in the 2021 Rule of Law Report<sup>133</sup>, the new Media Commission will be responsible for overseeing updated regulations for broadcasting and video on-demand services and the new regulatory framework for online safety<sup>134</sup>. The Media Commission will also have functions on promotion of pluralistic media, research, media literacy, protection of children, journalists and creators' support<sup>135</sup>. The Media Commission is expected to replace the Broadcasting Authority of Ireland (BAI) first quarter of 2023<sup>136</sup>. In the meantime, action is underway to ensure the continuation of broadcasting regulation during the transition to the new regulator. In the 2022 budget, the Government allocated EUR 5.5 million to the establishment of the Media Commission<sup>137</sup>.

Self-regulatory bodies in the press sector experienced an increase in the number of complaints received. In 2021, the Press Ombudsman saw significant numbers of complaints being made to their Office, related in particular to reporting about the COVID-19 pandemic<sup>138</sup>. Most notably, at the early stages of the COVID-19 pandemic, some issues arose concerning the respect of privacy and the right of individuals to have their personal medical history kept private<sup>139</sup>. Nevertheless, the Ombudsman concluded that in the vast majority of cases the media seemed to have covered the COVID-19 pandemic accurately and factually<sup>140</sup>.

A regulatory environment sustaining independent and impartial public service media is in place. The Broadcasting Act 2009 requires public service broadcasters to be independent from State, political and commercial influences as regards production of content, presentation of news and definition of programmes schedules<sup>141</sup>. Public service broadcasters are also required to comply with the Code of Practice for the Governance of State bodies and to follow governance practices and procedures, including codes of conduct, internal control and disclosure of interests<sup>142</sup>. Every year, the chairs of the Board for the public service broadcasters are required to confirm to the Minister for Tourism, Culture, Arts, Gaeltacht<sup>143</sup>, Sport and Media that the governance practices and procedures comply with the Code of Practice<sup>144</sup>. There are no reported attempts by government or political parties to directly interfere with editorial content or public service media activities<sup>145</sup>. However, the involvement of the Minister for Tourism, Culture, Arts, Gaeltacht, Sport and Media in the appointment of the boards and of the Government in the recruitment of the Directors General has been flagged as a risk factor<sup>146</sup>. Limited funding has also been indicated as a risk for the editorial independence of public service broadcasters<sup>147</sup>.

State advertising has grown in significance during the COVID-19 pandemic and specific rules are still lacking. Distribution of state advertising has increased during the pandemic and it would seem, that the placement by the State of advertising addressing COVID-19 measures helped ensure the viability of some radio stations<sup>148</sup>. As referred to in the 2020 Rule of Law Report, besides standard procurement guidelines, the Irish legal framework does not have specific rules on the placement of state advertising in media, which affects the transparency of the precise mechanism governing the distribution of state advertising to media outlets<sup>149</sup>. The Government required that COVID-19 advertisements were evenly placed in national, regional and local media. 2020 and 2021 figures show an even split of spending across national and regional media outlets in respect of public information campaigns on COVID-19<sup>150</sup>.

Financial difficulties increased local media market concentration. Economic distress following the COVID-19 pandemic pushed some local media actors to merge in order to remain viable, leading to increased media concentration in some areas of the country<sup>151</sup>. A targeted review of the media merger legislation is currently ongoing, with a view to identifying technical amendments to the legislation to ensure the continued robust operation of the media mergers regime<sup>152</sup>.

Additional steps have been taken to alleviate the economic distress of the media sector. In the first phases of the emergency, the Government put in place a range of support mechanisms for all businesses impacted by the COVID-19 pandemic. The Temporary COVID-19 Wage <sup>147</sup> Irish Public Service Broadcasters are funded via a TV licence fee, which despite repeated recommendations from the BAI to increase it, has remained unchanged since 2008. The lack of adequate funding, the increase of which is subject to governmental approval, together with the lack of clarity around the distribution of state advertising to individual media outlets, raise the risks the political considerations might influence the amount of funds on which Irish PSMs can rely, with consequences on their editorial independence, 2022 Media Pluralism Monitor, country report for Ireland, p. 22.

The aim is to ensure a high level of transparency on the sources of financing of media outlets and allow effective monitoring and controlling of risks of interference with the editorial and operational independence of the media. Subsidy Scheme and the Employment Wage Subsidy Scheme covered also media organisations and self-employed media professionals who were entitled to apply<sup>153</sup>. In 2021, an additional EUR 4.9 million was allocated through the Sound and Vision Scheme to fund the production of content and support the audiovisual and audio industry continuing to experience adverse impacts resulting from COVID-19 restrictions<sup>154</sup>.

There is a legal framework in place ensuring right of access to information. The Freedom of Information Act 2014 (FOI Act) is a key national measure, which co-exists with other, more context-specific measures such as the Open Data and Re-use of Public Sector Information Regulations 2021, and establishes a number of rights, including a right to access official records held by Government Departments or other public bodies<sup>155</sup>. The operation of the FOI act is effective, ensuring that the right of access to information is well protected in Ireland<sup>156</sup>. A comprehensive review of the Freedom of Information Act is underway which will seek to further strengthen and modernise the existing FOI regime. The review is expected to conclude in 2022.

The professional environment for journalists continues to be largely safe. Press in Ireland enjoys a large degree of freedom, and journalists can work in a safe and healthy environment. Nevertheless, in May 2022, the Council of Europe's platform to promote the protection of journalists and safety of journalist registered the second alert ever filed concerning Ireland since the establishment of the platform in 2015. The alert concerned two defamation proceedings initiated by two Members of the European Parliament against the public service broadcaster RTE<sup>157</sup>. In October 2021, the Mapping Media Freedom platform also registered a death threat launched by COVID-19 anti-vaccine campaigners against a broadcaster and its production team<sup>158</sup>.

A Report on the Review of the Defamation Act identifies a range of options for further reform. Defamation is not a criminal offence in Ireland. Accordingly, there are no convictions for defamation and cases are heard in the context of civil litigation claims<sup>159</sup>. However, the level of legal costs in defamation actions in Ireland is high and represents a major burden on <sup>153</sup> The Temporary COVID-19 Wage Subsidy Scheme was a scheme allowing employers to pay their employees during the COVID-19 pandemic. It was replaced in September 2020 by the Employment Wage Subsidy Scheme, which provides a flat-rate subsidy for businesses whose revenues declined by 30% because of COVID, Emergency Measures in the Public Interest (COVID-19) Act 2020.

The Sound and Vision Scheme is funded by the TV license fee from the Broadcasting Fund and is administered by the Broadcasting Authority of Ireland. The Scheme supports the production of high-quality TV and radio programmes on Irish culture, heritage and experience. The Scheme is reviewed every 3 years.

<sup>155</sup> While the Freedom of Information Act creates a general right of access to records held by state bodies, the Open Data and Re-use of Public Sector Information Regulations 2021 provides for a right to access to data held by all public sector bodies, with certain exceptions, notably educational, research and cultural organisations. newspapers<sup>160</sup>. On 1 March 2022, the Department of Justice published a Report on the Review of the Defamation Act presenting the concerns raised by several stakeholders during public consultation. The Review's key recommendations aim at reducing disproportionate awards and unnecessary legal costs and delays in defamation cases while providing clearer protection for responsible public interest journalism and investigative reporting<sup>161</sup>. The Review also explores the possibility of introducing a new mechanism against Strategic Lawsuit Against Public Participation (SLAPP), to allow defendants to ask for a summary dismissal of defamation proceedings brought against them and that they believe are SLAPP<sup>162</sup>. The General Scheme of the Defamation (Amendment) Bill to update aspects of defamation law, based on the recommendations set out in the Report of the statutory review of the Defamation Act 2009, is expected to be published in the fourth quarter of 2022<sup>163</sup>.

IV. OTHER INSTITUTIONAL ISSUES RELATED TO CHECKS AND BALANCES

Ireland has a bicameral parliamentary system: Parliament comprises a Lower House, and an Upper House. Government Ministers and members of Parliament have the right of legislative initiative. Constitutional review is carried out by the High Court with a right of appeal to the Court of Appeal and the Supreme Court. The Irish Human Rights and Equality Commission (IHREC) is Ireland's National Human Rights and Equality Institution. The Offices of the Ombudsman and Information Commissioner are independent both by law and in practice. Other relevant institutions in the system of checks and balances are the Ombudsman for the Defence Forces, the Ombudsman for Children's Office and the National Disability Authority.

New working methods have been adopted aiming at improving the functioning of the Houses of the Parliament. In July 2021, the President of Ireland wrote to the Speakers of both the Upper and Lower Houses of Parliament raising concerns with regard to the functioning of the legislative process<sup>164</sup>. The concern was that discussions on new bills tend to be concentrated during short periods of time (in particular, during the two weeks before recesses), with negative consequences for proper parliamentary scrutiny. As a consequence, the Speakers of both Houses of Parliament met with the Government and the Attorney General. Their new informal approach has been to publish some of the more complex bills during recess periods<sup>165</sup>. As a result, the text of the draft bill is available to members of Parliament and members of the public for a number of weeks in advance of it being considered formally, allowing for more in-depth consideration of the content. In addition, since July 2021, the Business Committee<sup>166</sup> has paid particular attention to proposals being made on the passage of legislation<sup>167</sup>. Moreover, the Speaker of the Lower House established a Forum on a Family Friendly and Inclusive <sup>166</sup> The Business Committee meets weekly to agree on the arrangements for the taking of business in the Lower House the following week, which is then agreed by the full Lower House at the beginning of the week at 'Order of Business'.

<sup>167</sup> This scrutiny has focused on the publication of new Government bills, the consideration at Committee and Report Stage and the time between each of those stages. When it is proposed to take stages quickly with little time in-between, the Business Committee has been raising concerns and making suggestions for alternative timings. Some of those suggestions have been agreed to by the Government.

On 1 January 2022, Ireland had two leading judgments of the European Court of Human Rights pending implementation<sup>171</sup>. At that time, Ireland's rate of leading judgments from the past 10 years that remain pending was at 33%, the average time that the judgments had been pending implementation was 9 years and 7 months<sup>172</sup>. The latter is affected by the length of non-implementation of the two judgments which have been pending for over 8 years<sup>173</sup>. On 1 July 2022, the number of leading judgments pending implementation remains two<sup>174</sup>.

The Irish Human Rights and Equality Commission was re-accredited with A status. The UN Global Alliance of National Human Rights Institutions (GANHRI) re-accredited the IHREC with A status<sup>175</sup>. In its report, GANHRI praised the role of IHREC to promote and protect human rights in Ireland, and made a number of recommendations to further strengthen its role in the system of checks and balances. Following the report, the Government has agreed to provide additional funding to ensure that IHREC can effectively carry out the full breadth of its mandate<sup>176</sup>.

Ireland has a vibrant and diverse civil society, but concerns remain in relation to legal provisions regulating funding of NGOs. In April 2022, the Government tabled an Electoral Reform Bill<sup>177</sup>, which provides for the establishment of an Electoral Commission. Once established, this Electoral Commission will carry out a comprehensive review of the Electoral Act 1997, including rules governing civil society organisations' access to funding<sup>178</sup>. The draft law did not directly address concerns from civil society organisations about the impact of the prohibitions under the Electoral Act to receive donations above a certain threshold for 'political purposes' or from foreign donors<sup>179</sup>. <sup>171</sup> The adoption of necessary execution measures for a judgment by the European Court of Human Rights is supervised by the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe. It is the Committee's practice to group cases against a State requiring similar execution measures, particularly general measures, and examine them jointly. Charities Regulator in 2021, which highlights the rules that apply to a charity when engaging in activities to promote a political cause, Civil Society Organisations have also raised concerns on the type of campaigning work that charities can engage in<sup>180</sup>. In addition, concerns have been raised regarding public statements from elected representatives to stop funding for Civil Society Organisations<sup>181</sup>. In April 2022 the Government tabled a General Scheme<sup>182</sup>, which, if passed, would mean that human rights organisations may apply for registration as a charity under the charitable purpose of the advancement of human rights. . It has been noted that this should remove any reservations funders may have had about supporting human rights organisations<sup>183</sup>. An increase is also reported as to the number of SLAPP being pursued against applicants for judicial review, in particular environmental organisations<sup>184</sup>.

The Government has provided funding to civil society to promote the rule of law in Ireland. In 2021, the Department of Foreign Affairs awarded a grant to the Irish Council for Civil Liberties (ICCL) through its Communicating Europe Initiative to increase the awareness of rule of law issues and the reporting process within Irish civil society organisations and the general public<sup>185</sup>. In this context, several events and conferences were organised to raise awareness on the state of the rule of law in Ireland, as well as to encourage civil society organisations to actively engage in a number of rule of law related topics.
