ABSTRACT

Reforms aimed at enhancing the independence and quality of the Irish justice system continue. Parliament held discussions on the Judicial Appointment Commission Bill. However, the envisaged composition of the Judicial Appointment Commission continues to raise concerns. The legislative provisions enabling the making of complaints relating to alleged judicial misconduct were commenced. While an analysis of approaches to reducing litigation costs is pending publication, no further steps have been taken. Several reports were adopted relating to aspects of the quality of justice such as the review of the Civil Legal Aid Scheme and obstacles to legal careers. The Government announced a significant increase in the number of judges. Strategies aimed at enhancing the digitalisation of justice also began to be operationalised. The efficiency of justice remains a challenge, and a system to regularly evaluate court performance based on defined indicators is lacking.

Ireland continues to have a comprehensive framework for both the prevention and repression of corruption, and a low level of perceived corruption. Several planned improvements have been postponed a number of times. After some delays, the permanent Advisory Council on Economic Crime and Corruption started preparing a new multi-annual anti-corruption strategy. A draft law on police reform allocates more independence to the external organisation, which investigates integrity in the police. A comprehensive overview of the ethics framework was conducted, while drafting, discussion and adoption of relevant legislation remain outstanding. A draft law to strengthen the framework on lobbying is being discussed in Parliament. Some steps were taken to strengthen the asset disclosure rules and the monitoring, and enforcement capacity of the Standards in Public Office Commission remains the same, despite handling an increased number of complaints and requests for advice. A new law on whistleblower protection entered into force.

Ireland continues to offer a high degree of media freedom and pluralism. The Government concluded a major overhaul of the Irish media law and enacted the Online Safety and Media Regulation Act, which updates the rules for audiovisual media services and establishes a new regulatory framework for online safety. The law also partially transposes the revised Audiovisual Media Services Directive and establishes a new media regulator. Challenges remain in relation to the transparency of the allocation of state advertising as specific rules regulating the matter are still missing. The Government committed to examining options for reform the TV licence fee system with a view to provide public service media with adequate funding. The reform of the defamation law remains under preparation. The national police, together with media stakeholders, established a Media Engagement Group to discuss threats and violence against journalists and ensure a coordinated response.

Regarding institutional issues related to checks and balances, the legislative process continued to be marked by the use of motions to shorten the time allocated to debate legislation, which raises concerns. The recently established Electoral Commission will shortly initiate a review of the Electoral Act, which will aim to address, among other matters, existing concerns by civil society on legal obstacles related to access to funding. Initiatives were taken aimed at encouraging the participation of the public and civil society in policy making, such as Citizen's Assemblies and the first National Civic Forum.

RECOMMENDATIONS

Overall, concerning the recommendations in the 2022 Rule of Law Report, Ireland has made:

- No progress on ensuring that the reform of the appointment and promotion of judges, as regards the composition of the Judicial Appointment Commission, is taking into account European standards on judicial appointments, as no significant changes have been introduced to the envisaged composition of the Judicial Appointments Commission.
- No progress on actions aimed at reducing litigation costs to ensure effective access to justice, taking into account European standards on disproportionate costs of litigation and their impact on access to courts.
- Some progress on strengthening the existing ethics framework, including on codes of conduct, revolving doors and on asset declarations in particular as regards the monitoring and enforcement capacity of the Standards in Public Office Commission, significant progress on lobbying.
- Some progress on continuing the reform of the Defamation Act to improve the professional environment for journalists taking into account European standards on the protection of journalists.
- Some progress on taking measures to address legal obstacles related to access to funding for civil society organisations.

On this basis, and considering other developments that took place in the period of reference, it is recommended to Ireland to:

- Ensure that the reform of the appointment and promotion of judges, as regards the composition of the Judicial Appointment Commission, is taking into account European standards on judicial appointments.
- Continue actions aimed at reducing litigation costs to ensure effective access to justice, taking into account European standards on disproportionate costs of litigation and their impact on access to courts.
- Strengthen and digitalise the existing ethics framework, on asset declarations and lobbying, including the monitoring and enforcement capacity of the Standards in Public Office Commission.
- Advance with the reform of the Defamation Act to improve the professional environment for journalists taking into account European standards on the protection of journalists.
- Take measures to address legal obstacles related to access to funding for civil society organisations, as part of the reform of the Electoral Act.

I. JUSTICE SYSTEM

Ireland is a common law jurisdiction, whose judiciary is divided into a civil and a criminal branch. The court system comprises a court of final appeal (the Supreme Court), a Court of Appeal, and courts of first instance which include a High Court with full jurisdiction in all criminal and civil matters and courts of limited jurisdiction: the Circuit Court and the District Court organised on a geographical basis. The Special Criminal Courts¹ are non-jury courts and deal with paramilitary, subversive and organised crime cases. Moreover, a number of specialised tribunals² operate in different areas. A Judicial Council³ was established in 2019. While Ireland does not have a constitutional court, the Courts are empowered to interpret and uphold the Constitution. Judicial appointments are made by the President of Ireland, acting on the advice of the Government. The Judicial Appointments Advisory Board (JAAB) is tasked with the selection of suitable candidates for appointment. The prosecution service is not part of the judicial branch. The Attorney General is the legal adviser to the Government. The legal profession has two types of lawyers – solicitors, represented by the Law Society, and barristers, largely represented by the Bar of Ireland. The Legal Services Regulatory Authority (LSRA), an independent body established in 2016, is Ireland’s national statutory regulator for both branches of the legal profession.

Independence

The level of perceived judicial independence in Ireland continues to be high among the general public and is now high among companies. Overall, 73% of the general population and 72% of companies perceive the level of independence of courts and judges to be ‘fairly or very good’ in 2023⁴. According to data in the 2023 EU Justice Scoreboard, the level has remained consistently high for the general public since 2016 (which was 75% and remains at

¹ The Offences Against the State Act 1939 provides for the establishment of Special Criminal Courts. A Special Criminal Court now known as Special Criminal Court No. 1 is operating since 1972. Special Criminal Court No. 2 was established and is operating since 2016. A Special Criminal Court sits with three Judges and no jury. The Government appoints a panel of High Court, Circuit Court and District Court Judges to sit in the Special Criminal Courts. There are currently nineteen judges on the panel. Cases involving terrorism and organised crime offences are automatically brought before a Special Criminal Court for trial. Other offences are brought before or sent for trial when the Director of Public Prosecutions certifies that the ordinary Courts are inadequate to secure the effective administration of justice and the preservation of public peace and order. An appeal against a conviction or sentence by the Special Criminal Courts can be brought to the Court of Appeal.

² Including a Labour Court, which has sole appellate jurisdiction in all disputes under employment rights enactments. While the Labour Court is not a court of law, when exercising this jurisdiction the Labour Court is involved in the administration of justice. The Court also carries a jurisdiction under the Industrial Relations Acts 1946 – 2015. In exercise of that jurisdiction it operates as an industrial relations tribunal, hearing both sides in a case and then issuing a Recommendation setting out its opinion on the dispute and the terms on which it should be settled. Recommendations made by the Court concerning the investigation of disputes under the Industrial Relations Acts 1946 – 2015 are not binding on the parties concerned. The Court's determinations under the Employment Rights enactments are legally binding.

³ In addition to promoting and maintaining public confidence in the judiciary and the administration of justice, the main functions of the Judicial Council are to consider complaints in relation to judicial misconduct, to ensure the continuous education and training of judges and to draft guidelines on certain issues including personal injuries’ damages.

the same level as in 2022 (73%). The perceived judicial independence among companies has slightly decreased in comparison with 2022 (77%), as well as with 2016 (79%).

There has been no progress on the reform of the appointment and promotion of judges, as the Judicial Appointments Commission Bill has been discussed in Parliament without significant changes to the composition of the Commission. The 2022 Rule of Law Report recommended to Ireland to “ensure that the reform of the appointment and promotion of judges, as regards the composition of the Judicial Appointments Commission, takes into account European standards on judicial appointments”⁵. As reflected in the 2022 Report⁶, the Government tabled a draft law in Parliament in April 2022 on the appointment and promotion of judges providing for the establishment of a Judicial Appointments Commission. The Commission would be chaired by the Chief Justice and would have three judicial members⁷ and four lay members⁸, as well as the Attorney General in a non-voting capacity⁹. This system better limits the discretion of the Government compared to both the current system of a list of seven candidates¹⁰ and the system envisaged in the General Scheme¹¹ of five unranked candidates. As stated in the 2022 Rule of Law Report¹² the composition of the envisaged Commission does not provide for a clear majority of judges chosen by their peers. Some stakeholders¹³, including the Chief Justice himself¹⁴, have raised concerns on the composition of the Commission, including the fact that the Attorney General would sit on the Commission in an ex-officio non-voting capacity. The draft law was passed by the Lower House of Parliament in July 2022 and is currently at Report Stage before the Upper House. Since the tabling of the draft law, no significant changes have been introduced to the envisaged composition of the Judicial Appointments Commission, and therefore there has Recommendation CM/Rec(2010)12 of the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe, para. 46-48 – “The authority taking decisions on the selection and career of judges should be independent of the executive and legislative powers. With a view to guaranteeing its independence, at least half of the members of the authority should be judges chosen by their peers. However, where the constitutional or other legal provisions prescribe that the head of state, the government or the legislative power take decisions concerning the selection and career of judges, an independent and competent authority drawn in substantial part from the judiciary (without prejudice to the rules applicable to councils for the judiciary contained in Chapter IV) should be authorised to make recommendations or express opinions which the relevant appointing authority follows in practice. The membership of the independent authorities referred to in paragraphs 46 and 47 should ensure the widest possible representation. Their procedures should be transparent with reasons for decisions being made available to applicants on request. An unsuccessful candidate should have the right to challenge the decision, or at least the procedure under which the decision was made”.

⁹ This will lead to a total of eight voting members – four judicial and four lay persons.

been no progress on the implementation of the recommendation made in the 2022 Rule of Law Report.

The Judicial Conduct Committee finalised the process for submitting complaints relating to alleged judicial misconduct, enabling the commencement of the relevant legislative provisions. On 3 October 2022, the remaining provisions of the Judicial Council Act entered into force. As a result, complaints relating to alleged judicial misconduct can now be made to the Registrar to the Judicial Conduct Committee, who determines whether the complaint is admissible¹⁵. If either the Registrar or the review committee decides to admit the complaint, the Judicial Conduct Committee follows the procedures outlined in relation to informal resolution or establishing a Panel of Inquiry. However, Parliament remains in charge of deciding on the removal of judges from office and retains a margin of discretion in that regard¹⁶. As reflected in the 2022 Rule of Law Report¹⁷, this could raise concerns about the potential politicisation of the process, even if this process has so far never been engaged¹⁸.

Quality

While the economic analysis of models or approaches to reducing litigation costs is pending publication, no further steps have been taken. The 2022 Rule of Law Report recommended to Ireland to “continue actions aimed at reducing litigation costs to ensure effective access to justice, taking into account European standards on disproportionate costs of litigation and their impact on access to courts”¹⁹. The high level of litigation costs in Ireland is considered as a source of concern²⁰. The economic analysis of models or approaches to reducing litigation costs, announced in December 2021, is being finalised and its findings subject to legal assessment of potential options. Therefore, there has been no progress on the implementation of the recommendation made in the 2022 Rule of Law Report.

An Independent Group aimed at reviewing the Civil Legal Aid Scheme has been established. In June 2022, an Independent Review Group was appointed by the Minister of Justice to undertake a comprehensive review of the Civil Legal Aid Scheme in Ireland²¹. The current system has been criticised by stakeholders for being prohibitive and a barrier to access to justice²². The Review Group has been charged with the task of examining the current scheme’s flexibility and responsiveness to meet the legal needs of beneficiaries of civil legal aid, as well as the current operation of the scheme, the categories of civil law which are and should be covered by it, how the scheme is delivered, and how it relates to other forms of public legal assistance. Regarding criminal legal aid, work continues on the preparation of a General Scheme of a Criminal Legal Aid Bill.

The Government has announced a significant increase in the number of judges following the recommendations of the report of the Judicial Planning Working Group. According to the 2023 EU Justice Scoreboard²³, Ireland remains the EU Member State with the lowest number of judges per inhabitant. Moreover, stakeholders have signalled that in addition to the current workload, future legislation such as the Family Court Bill would expand the jurisdiction of the District Court, so further resources may be needed²⁴. In 2021, a Judicial Planning Working Group was set up to consider the number and types of judges required to ensure the efficient administration of justice over the next five years in the first instance, and also with a view to the longer term. The Working Group has completed its work and published its report on 24 February 2023²⁵. The report was informed by the findings of an OECD report²⁶ commissioned by the Irish Government to provide key input to the work of the Working Group. The report recommended increasing the number of judges by 44 additional judges by the end of 2024, and to carry out a review in early 2025²⁷. Consequently, the report also recommended to ensure that adequate resources in terms of clerical and other support staff are provided to the Courts Service²⁸. The establishment of a strategic approach to human resource management has been also recommended²⁹. However, the report has not touched upon the issue of establishing an appropriate structure for discussion of questions concerning constitutional safeguards of the judiciary in connection with employment conditions, which is a pending recommendation by the Group of States against Corruption (GRECO)³⁰. According to European standards, it is advisable that associations of judges be provided with a possibility to consider and comment on intended legislation in matters connected with the status of judges and the administration of courts³¹. Following the publication of the report, the Government announced the appointment of 24 new judges in 2023³², with the appointment of 20 additional new judges following the implementation of further reforms³³. Moreover, the Government has also announced the preparation of an implementation plan in relation to all the recommendations of the report.

The Fourth Evaluation Round reflected that the constitutional protection providing that judges were exempt from a pay reduction which applied to other public officials was revoked and amended. In this context, GRECO recommended that an appropriate structure be established within the framework of which questions concerning constitutional safeguards of the judiciary in connection with employment conditions are to be examined. In its latest report published in July 2022 (GRECO Fourth Evaluation Round – Second Compliance Report, para. 21-26.), GRECO concluded that the recommendation remained to be implemented.

The Government has taken initial steps to operationalise strategies aimed at enhancing the digitalisation of justice. The Implementation Plan arising from the Review of the Administration of Civil Justice³⁴, published in May 2022, sets out the approach and timescales to use e-litigation technology to capture case management information and case flow data. Moreover, the ICT Strategy 2021-2024 and the Data Strategy 2021-2024 foresee the adoption of a unified case management system and a unified data model will occur over a number of years. The migration of High Court civil matters into this new system/model will occur in 2023. The Government has also committed to apply this technology platform to other jurisdictions over subsequent years. The 2023 EU Justice Scoreboard has shown progress in other areas as well, as for instance it is now possible to initiate proceedings and file claims online for some cases, including small claims, e-licensing, legal costs adjudication, personal insolvency, and leave to appeal to the Supreme Court³⁵.

The Group to review the Offences Against the State Act published its report recommending to repeal the Acts in their entirety. The Group to review the Offences Against the State Acts, set up in February 2021, published on 21 June 2023 its final report³⁶. The majority opinion of the Group recommends to repeal the Offences Against the State Acts in their entirety, while keeping some elements in replaced legislation, including the operation of a new non-jury court. The Government is currently analysing the report and exploring policy options. The United Nations and civil society had called for the immediate abolition of the Special Criminal Court³⁷ or, alternatively, to strengthen the procedure of the Court to ensure respect of the right to fair trial³⁸.

Efficiency

There are concerns relating to the length of proceedings and a system to regularly evaluate the court performance based on defined indicators is still lacking. According to data available on annual reports from the Courts Service, the average length of proceedings in the High Court in 2021 was 797 days, an increase of 137 days in comparison with 2020³⁹. Moreover, the average length of proceedings for criminal cases regarding summary offences also increased in 2021 in all instances⁴⁰. The length of proceedings at the Court of Appeal has decreased for civil cases (from 579 days in 2020 to 529 days in 2021), while it has increased for criminal cases (from 371 days in 2020 to 420 days in 2021)⁴¹. The average length of proceedings in the Supreme Court has significantly increased and remains very high (from 2513 days in 2020 to 3946 days in 2021)⁴². Moreover, according to data of the 2023 EU Justice Scoreboard, the clearance rate for non-criminal cases was 62% in 2021, the lowest of the EU⁴³. Changes to Rules of Court have been implemented to encourage compliance with time limits⁴⁴. The 2022 Rule of Law Report noted that in Ireland there is no system to regularly evaluate the court performance based on defined indicators⁴⁵. Moreover, a recent OECD study reflected that data are not collected or used for the purposes of case and court management, but rather only for annual reports⁴⁶. The report of the Judicial Planning Working Group has also recommended that the Courts Service needs to adopt, as a priority, a comprehensive system to collect data and monitor performance measures⁴⁷. In this context, the Courts Service has initiated discussions to explore actions aimed at increasing the compilation of data on the length of proceedings⁴⁸. It would be important that data on the length of proceedings is systematically recorded in line with the methodology of the Council of Europe and the European Commission for the efficiency of justice⁴⁹.

A draft law setting up a compensation scheme for cases of excessive length of court proceedings was tabled. On 27 February 2023, the Government tabled a draft law establishing a compensation scheme for cases of excessive length of court proceedings⁵⁰. As noted in the 2022 Rule of Law Report⁵¹, legislation establishing a compensation scheme to award damages in the event of protracted court proceedings is a long-pending requirement by a European Court of Human Rights (‘ECtHR’) judgment from 2010⁵². The draft law provides for the establishment of an independent assessment process to assess claims for breach of the right to the conclusion of proceedings within a reasonable time and, where appropriate, an award of compensation⁵³.

II. ANTI-CORRUPTION FRAMEWORK

The responsibility for fighting and preventing corruption in Ireland fall under the control of several public authorities. The national police, specifically, the Garda National Economic Crime Bureau (GNECB)⁵⁴, investigates and prevents possible criminal acts of corruption. The Garda Anti-Corruption Unit (GACU) is responsible for promoting integrity as well as detecting and investigating corruption within the national police. The Garda Síochána Ombudsman Commission investigates cases of misconduct of the national police affecting the public interest and complaints from third parties regarding integrity in the national police. Within the GNECB, the national police has a distinct Anti-Bribery and Corruption Unit (ABCU), responsible for policing foreign bribery and corruption cases. The ABCU monitors foreign corruption cases for Irish involvement. The Corporate Enforcement Authority (CEA), that has replaced the Office of the Director of Corporate Enforcement, retains both

The authority to prosecute lies with the Office of the Director of Public Prosecutions (ODPP). The Standards in Public Office Commission (SIPO) continues overseeing the integrity framework for public officials including conflict of interests, lobbying and party financing where it also provides advice to office holders⁵⁶. The purpose of the Advisory Council is to coordinate and lead the delivery of a whole-of-government approach to economic crime and corruption, as well as to act as a “centre of excellence” for research and analysis, awareness-raising and training⁵⁷.

The perception of public sector corruption among experts and business executives is that the level of corruption in the public sector remains relatively low. In the 2022 Corruption Perceptions Index by Transparency International, Ireland scores 77/100 and ranks 6th in the European Union and 10th globally⁵⁸. This perception has improved over the past five years⁵⁹. The 2023 Special Eurobarometer on Corruption shows that 59% of respondents consider corruption widespread in their country (EU average 70%) and 17% of respondents feel personally affected by corruption in their daily lives (EU average 24%)⁶⁰. As regards businesses, 28% of companies consider that corruption is widespread (EU average 65%) and 7% consider that corruption is a problem when doing business (EU average 35%)⁶¹. Furthermore, 32% of respondents find that there are enough successful prosecutions to deter people from corrupt practices (EU average 32%)⁶², while 26% of companies believe that people and businesses caught for bribing a senior official are appropriately punished (EU average 30%)⁶³.

The permanent Advisory Council against Economic Crime and Corruption has been tasked with drafting a multi-annual strategy to tackle corruption. After some delays⁶⁴, the Advisory Council was established in May 2022 and tasked to coordinate and lead the delivery of a whole-of-government approach to economic crime and corruption. The Council is composed by a chairman and six members from the business and financial sector, academia and civil society. It is supported by a secretariat from the Ministry of Justice⁶⁵. However, civil society organisations focusing on integrity and anti-corruption are not currently included in the Council, which has been criticised⁶⁶. The Advisory Council has started working on a multi-annual National Strategy to Combat Economic Crime and Corruption⁶⁷. In 2023, the Advisory Council will perform a public consultation to gather public input for the strategy, after which the drafting should start with the aim to send a draft to the Government by the end of the year⁶⁸.

⁵⁸ Transparency International (2023), Corruption Perceptions Index 2022. The level of perceived corruption is categorised as follows: low (the perception among experts and business executives of public sector corruption scores above 79); relatively low (scores between 79-60), relatively high (scores between 59-50), high (scores below 50).

The Government has proposed further changes related to criminal procedure rules, including provisions regarding police regulation. In addition to the new Criminal Procedure Act 2021⁶⁹, which entered into force in February 2022⁷⁰, the Government has presented a new Policing, Security and Community Safety Bill⁷¹. The aim of the Bill is to assist in ensuring the rule of law and supporting anticorruption by modernising the oversight of the policing service in Ireland via a reformed Policing and Community Safety Authority and a reconstituted framework for Police complaints and investigations⁷². The target date for implementation is January 2024⁷³. If enacted, the Bill would repeal the Garda Síochána Act 2005 (as amended) in its entirety⁷⁴. The Competition Amendment Act was signed into law on Additionally, two of the six ordinary members of the Advisory Council against Economic Crime and Corruption represent civil society. All the members were appointed following an open call for expressions of interest process. One of the civil society representatives appointed in May 2022 was the then-General Secretary of the Irish Congress of Trade Unions, Patricia King. Ms King stepped down from her role at ICTU and on the Council early in 2023 and a call for expressions of interest was launched in March 2023, with a new civil society representative to be appointed in the coming months.

As reported in the 2022 Rule of Law Report p. 11, a high-level group within the Department of Justice was instructed to review the prosecution role attributed to the national police. As a result, the 2018 Commission on the Future of Policing in Ireland (CoFPI) issued a report, which recommended that the national police no longer prosecute cases on behalf of the ODPP at District Court level. A High-Level Review Group (HLRG) was established in September 2020, tasked specifically with reviewing the role of An Garda Síochána in the public prosecution system. Since the final report of the HLRG was not completed at the time of publication of the Bill, the recommendation was not included in the Policing, Security and Community Safety Bill.

Cooperation within and between police and prosecution is smooth, although challenges have been raised regarding lack of resources. The investigation of corruption offences is a shared task within the national police, including the GNECB and its specialised ABCU. The current capacity of the ABCU is below the planned staffing, but a recruitment competition is ongoing⁷⁶. While financial resources for the GNECB have increased⁷⁷, the total number of police staff available for investigating corruption related offences has decreased. The decrease is due to a series of internal shifts, secondments, promotions and retirements, although competitions are ongoing⁷⁸. The current low number of filled positions hampers the GNECB's ability to pro-actively act on investigations⁷⁹. On breaches of company law, the cooperation between the Garda Síochána and the Corporate Enforcement Authority (CEA) is developed through a Memorandum of Understanding, which seconds police officers to CEA⁸⁰. GNECB underlined a particular difficulty in collaborating with CEA on information sharing and exchanges because of privacy constraints⁸¹. The prosecution of corruption offences remains under the control of the Office of the Director of Public Prosecutions (ODPP) and its Special Financial Crime Unit that deals with cases of high complexity⁸². The Forum of senior representatives to facilitate greater inter-agency co-ordination, collaboration and information sharing meets regularly to discuss improvements in cooperation and reports to the Advisory Council⁸³. The capacity of the prosecution services has been reinforced. Nevertheless, given the need for an initial training before joining the service, the preparation will take time and not all necessary tools or expertise, such as on forensic accounting, are at present sufficiently available⁸⁴. remains difficult, with no solution found to allow cooperation between Irish authorities and the EPPO. The Member States participating in the EPPO have notified the EPPO as a competent authority for the purposes of EU instruments of mutual recognition and judicial cooperation, pursuant to Article 105(3) of the EPPO Regulation, yet such notifications are not sufficient to allow Irish authorities to cooperate with the EPPO. The Irish authorities have stated that they are working on a solution in the Irish internal legal system, but such solution has not yet been found⁸⁵. In the absence of a legal instrument relating to cooperation in criminal matters and surrender between the EPPO and the non-participating Member States⁸⁶, Ireland is working on a unilateral solution. The relevant criminal justice legislation [– the Criminal Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill –] is expected to be in place in Q3 2023⁸⁷.

The police are working to strengthen the prevention of corruption among their staff.

The national police have a dedicated anti-corruption unit, the GACU, to investigate and prevent corruption inside the police. Currently, the GACU is following up on the recommendations of the Garda Síochána Inspectorate Report to better counter the threat of internal corruption within the police, with several actions stretching until the end of 2024⁸⁸. The GACU stressed that their most important responsibility was to create trust among police officers, that any report on misconduct would be taken seriously, to prevent fear of repercussions and to ensure police officers feel confident to report misconducts⁸⁹. External complaints about integrity related issues within the police can also be reported to the Garda Ombudsman. The aforementioned draft law on police reform proposed by the Government in 2022 would rename and reform the current Garda Ombudsman body, as well as aim to increase the independence of the Garda Ombudsman itself⁹⁰.

Difficulties in investigating foreign bribery remain. The ABCU, established in March 2017 as part of the GNECB, underlines the difficulty in investigating foreign bribery because of lack of cooperation with third countries through mutual legal assistance⁹¹. The ODPD signalled that Ireland, which lacks legislation on plea deals linked to foreign bribery, has many companies, operating in Ireland, that are also active in the United States or the United ⁸⁵ Contribution from the EPPO for the 2023 Rule of Law Report. Ireland has informed the EPPO that it intends to submit draft legislation, which would allow cooperation with the EPPO, to its Parliament. Based on the information available to the EPPO it seems that the contemplated approach would mean that Ireland would still not recognise the EPPO as a competent authority for the EU legal instruments referred to in Article 105(3) of the EPPO Regulation but would mirror only some of the cooperation procedures foreseen in the EU law on the matter.

Some progress has been made in relation to the strengthening of the ethics framework with a completion of a comprehensive review with recommendations for improvement; however, the actual drafting, discussion and adoption of relevant legislation remain outstanding. The 2022 Rule of Law Report recommended to Ireland to “strengthen the existing ethics framework, including on codes of conduct, asset declarations, revolving doors and lobbying, and in particular as regards the monitoring and enforcement capacity of the Standards in Public Office Commission”⁹³. On 7 February 2023, Ireland presented a review study of the existing statutory framework for Ethics in Public Office⁹⁴. This review gives a comprehensive overview of the existing integrity framework in Ireland and makes recommendations for improvement. The review includes many existing recommendations already highlighted by previous national reviews or international organisations reports⁹⁵, such as: replacing the existing ethics framework with a uniform and consolidated values-based normative framework, a recommendation which was already made in GRECO’s Fourth Round Evaluation Report in 2014⁹⁶; including new statutory prohibitions in an ethics law, which are outstanding recommendations of the Mahon Tribunal⁹⁷ and the 2020 Hamilton report⁹⁸; and the strengthening of the powers of investigation, sanctioning and enforcement of the SIPO. The 2015 Public Sector Standards Bill, which was never adopted in Parliament, will be the starting point for new legislative proposals⁹⁹. Although the review study forms a solid basis to enact the necessary changes, actual drafting, discussion and adoption of legislation in relation to the ethics framework remains outstanding, as noted already last year. Therefore, there has been some progress on the implementation of the recommendation made in the 2022 Rule of Law Report.

There has been some progress to strengthen asset declarations provisions. The 2022 Rule of Law Report recommended to Ireland to “strengthen the [...] asset declarations”¹⁰⁰. Rules on asset and interest declarations apply to public office holders¹⁰¹, members of Parliament and civil servants under the Ethics Acts¹⁰². However, only members of Parliament are required to publicly disclose their interests and present annual statements to SIPO¹⁰³. As reported in the 2021 and 2022 Rule of Law Reports¹⁰⁴, the material scope of declarations remains limited, although new provisions might be adopted in the future on declaration of liabilities¹⁰⁵. The Review of Ireland's Statutory Framework for Ethics in Public Office underscores this situation¹⁰⁶, including the strengthening of the powers of enforcement of SIPO¹⁰⁷. Additionally, the digitalisation of the asset and interest disclosures would not only ensure a more user-friendly way of filing declarations but would also ensure an easier use by SIPO and civil society. At the moment, there is no legal obstacle to start the digitalisation process¹⁰⁸. The Government underlines that progress on strengthening asset declaration provisions, recommended as part of the Review of the statutory framework mentioned above, also depends on the discussion and adoption of legislative reform, which is currently being prepared¹⁰⁹. SIPO perceives an increased workload, both in terms of complaints¹¹⁰ about breaches and requests for advice. In order to properly meet the growing demand, additional resources would be needed¹¹¹. Therefore, some progress was made on the implementation of the recommendation made in the 2022 Rule of Law Report.

¹¹² Electoral Act 1997. Information received from the Ministry for Housing, Local Government and Heritage in the context of the country visit to Ireland. The Department of Housing, Local Government and Heritage suggests the opportunity of a comprehensive review of the party financing framework, also in light of the need to cover new tools, notably digital fundraising.

¹¹³ In January 2023, a significant political party criticised the Minister for Public Expenditure over his failure to properly record 2016 election expenses (particularly his failure to include a payment-in-kind donation he received for services, which was admitted by the Minister at the Parliament). Later on, in February 2023, Irish media reported that SIPO was also questioning financial declarations of the mentioned party, which was also confirmed by the party's Leader itself. The importance of an adequate ethic laws in relation to framework would therefore be needed, in order to address the need for modernisation and digitalisation of data collection. The Government has expressed willingness to carry out a comprehensive review of the Electoral Act 1997, now that an Electoral Commission has been established¹¹⁴. SIPO oversees the integrity framework for public officials including party financing¹¹⁵.

Significant progress was made to strengthen the existing framework on lobbying, as amendments to the current legislation are pending in Parliament. The 2022 Rule of Law Report recommended to Ireland to “strengthen the existing ethics framework, including on [...] lobbying”¹¹⁶. The Regulation of Lobbying (Amendment) Bill 2022 (the Bill) was tabled by the Government on 22 September 2022. The draft law then completed the Lower House Final Stage on 1 March 2023 and the Upper House Final Stage on 17 May 2023. Currently, it is due for return to the Lower House in June 2023 to approve amendments made in the Upper House. The draft law will amend the Regulation of Lobbying Act 2015 and aims to build on the existing legislative foundation to further strengthen Ireland’s lobbying laws. In particular, the purpose of the draft law is to extend provisions to lobbying activity by certain representative and issue-based bodies and to lobbying conducted by non-remunerated office-holders of other representative and issue-based bodies. Moreover, the draft law slightly amends the information required to appear in the register. The draft law would create a system of administrative financial sanctions which can be imposed for some relevant contraventions, including for a breach of the cooling-off provision.¹¹⁷ The cooling-off provision would still only apply to lobbying however, and not include a cooling-off period for designated public officials¹¹⁸. Therefore, significant progress was made on the implementation of the recommendation made in the 2022 Rule of Law Report.

Legislation transposing the Whistleblowers Directive has entered into force. The Protected Disclosures (Amendment) Act 2022 was signed into law on 21 July 2022 and came into force on 1 January 2023. This law aims to transpose the EU Whistleblowers’

¹¹⁴ See Section IV. Other institutional issues related to checks and balances. The Minister of State for Heritage and Electoral Reform has stated that the Government is committed to a comprehensive review of the Electoral Act 1997 by the Electoral Commission, when established, with a view to making recommendations to address, among other matters, the concerns raised by civil society in connection with the wide-ranging definition of “political purposes” as set out in section 22(2)(aa) of the Electoral Act 1997. Written contribution from the Ministry for Housing, Local Government and Heritage in the context of the country visit in Ireland. The Government has increased financial support to Transparency International Ireland to operate a “Speak Up” helpline and a legal advice centre that offers information and advice to support whistleblowers. Transparency International has also been nominated to receive protected disclosures from Garda personnel, including on suspected corruption¹²⁰.

III. MEDIA PLURALISM AND MEDIA FREEDOM

In Ireland, the legal framework concerning media pluralism is in the Constitution, which requires the State to guarantee the exercise of fundamental rights, including freedom of expression and freedom of the press¹²¹. The Government has adopted the Online Safety and Media Regulation Act 2022 (the OSMR Act), which partially transposed the Audiovisual Media Services Directive¹²² and resulted in a major overhaul of the Irish media law, including the establishment of a new independent media regulator¹²³. Primary legislation provides safeguards for the independence of the public service media¹²⁴. The Government has been carrying out a review of the Freedom of Information Act (FOI) with the purpose of strengthening the right of access to information.

A new media authority with extensive regulatory functions has been established. The recently commenced OSMR Act provides for the establishment of a new multi-person media regulatory authority, known as Coimisiún na Meán (the Media Commission), which replaced the Broadcasting Authority of Ireland (BAI)¹²⁵. The Media Commission possesses extensive regulatory functions which include, among others, regulating broadcasting, video on-demand, and video-sharing platform services, acting as licencing authority for radio and television, and will be designated as the Digital Service Coordinator under the Digital Services Act¹²⁶. The Media Commission is also responsible for the oversight and implementation of the new regulatory framework for online safety established by the OSMR Act. To this end, it is empowered to adopt and assess compliance with binding online safety codes governing the standards and practices that online services will have to follow when tackling the availability of harmful online content¹²⁷. The independence of the Media Commission is ensured through a set of legal safeguards that the OSMR Act provides in relation to the procedures for the appointment and dismissal of the members of the Media Commission¹²⁸. In order to fulfil its new wider functions, fund its activity, and ensure its independence, the Media Commission is expected to be entirely self-financing and has the power to impose a levy on the services regulated under the OSMR Act¹²⁹. However, some stakeholders have expressed concerns in relation to the adequacy of the resources with respect to the broad functions that the Media Commission will be carrying out under the new regulatory framework¹³⁰.

The system of self-regulatory bodies operating in the press sector remains effective. In Ireland, the news media sector can rely upon a well-established self-regulatory framework based on the operation of the Office of the Press Ombudsman and the Press Council of Ireland. They oversee compliance with the professional and ethical standards embodied in the relevant Code of Practice by their members, which comprise the totality of daily and Sunday newspapers published in Ireland, the majority of local newspapers, as well as Irish magazines and online-only news publications¹³¹. In 2022, the Office of the Press Ombudsman analysed 19 complaints¹³². The fact that, over 15 years of operation, more than 5 000 complaints have been submitted, with an average of 400 a year, signals that the public considers the system as an effective way to ensure compliance with professional and ethical standards in the Irish press¹³³.

The law ensures the independence of the public service media, while work is ongoing on the reform of the public funding framework. In Ireland there are two public service media, Raidió Teilifís Éireann (RTÉ) and the Irish language public broadcaster TG4. They hold significant audience shares, accounting together for 29% of linear broadcasting viewing, with RTÉ representing the largest accessed online and offline source in Ireland for news and current affairs¹³⁴. Although there is no evidence of direct political interference in editorial activities of the public service broadcasters¹³⁵ and the appointment process also involves a writing of the decision and the reasons for the removal, in accordance with, Section 12(10) (a) and (b) of the Online Safety and Media Regulation Act 2022.

In October 2022, RTÉ declined an invite of the parliamentary committee on media to discuss its editorial decisions in relation to the coverage of particular issues, Irish Examiner (2022), Politicians to question RTÉ on decision making; Contribution from cross-parliamentary committee, the involvement of the Minister for Tourism, Culture, Arts, Gaeltacht, Sport and Media and of the Government in the appointment of the public service media boards, as also referred to in the 2022 Rule of Law Report, is considered as a risk factor for the independence of the public service broadcasters¹³⁶. Such risk is nevertheless counterbalanced by the rules whereby the removal of a member of the management board has to be approved by each House of the Parliament¹³⁷. RTÉ's editorial independence is further strengthened through standards and best practices of editorial integrity and independence, agreed and respected across all the outlet, including the management and the editorial staff¹³⁸. Irish law also requires the public service broadcasters to comply with safeguards ensuring the plurality of information and opinions¹³⁹. The Government has also committed to examining the options for a reform of the TV licence-fee system with a view to provide the public service media with more secure and adequate funding¹⁴⁰.

A searchable database financially supported by the media regulator ensures the access to information on media ownership. Since 2020, the Media Commission has been funding the Mediaownership.ie database, an online database providing ownership information of Irish-owned media outlets¹⁴¹. The database, which is publicly accessible, is developed and managed by the Dublin City University's School of Communications and facilitates, in practice, also the access to information about beneficial owners¹⁴². Nevertheless, given the ¹³⁹ The Irish law requires public service broadcasters to ensure that their programming is responsible to the interests and concerns of the whole community, that it reflects the cultural diversity informing the Irish society, and upholds the democratic values enshrined in the Constitution, especially those relating to rightful liberty of expression, Broadcasting Act 2009, Sections 114 and 118. In addition, RTÉ has also adopted a Diversity and Inclusion Charter, which expresses the outlet's commitment to develop and implement policies aimed at increasing social inclusiveness and fostering the presence and representation of minority voices within its organisation as well as in relation to the content offered, RTÉ (2018), Diversity and Inclusion Charter, as confirmed by RTÉ in the context of the country visit in Ireland.

Stakeholders have called for more clarity in the allocation of state advertising. As described in the 2020 and 2022 Rule of Law Reports, Ireland does not have in place specific rules regulating the placement of state advertising in media¹⁴⁵. Since the 2022 Rule of Law Report, there have been no changes in the legal framework concerning the allocation of state advertising. Although the evidence collected at this stage does not suggest that the Government expenditure gives rise to uneven or unfair treatment of media in relation to state advertising¹⁴⁶, some stakeholders have stressed the need of greater clarity on the decision-making process concerning the allocation of state advertising. In particular, stakeholders pointed to the risk of potential conflict of interests stemming from recourse to third-party agencies to place public bodies' advertisements, when such agencies are owned and controlled by companies that are also significant players in the regional newspaper markets¹⁴⁷.

The legal framework for access to information is being revised. Since the 2022 Rule of Law Report, there have been no major developments with respect to the ongoing revision of the Freedom of Information Act 2014 (FOI Act), which aims to enhance and modernise the legal framework regulating the right of access to information¹⁴⁸. During the public consultation stage, which closed in September 2022, around 2400 responses were received and are now under consideration of the Minister, with the view to produce a final report with findings and recommendations in the course of 2023¹⁴⁹. According to a progress update report published in December 2022¹⁵⁰, slightly over four out of every five requests of access to documents annually submitted under the FOI Act were granted in full or in part in the years following the introduction of the 2014 FOI Act, with only few requesters dissatisfied and asking for a review of the decision¹⁵¹. Although a customer satisfaction survey reported that 60% of requesters were satisfied with the handling of their requests¹⁵², the evidence emerging from the ongoing review also points to the need to adjust some aspects of the framework in order to foster its efficiency and consistency. In particular, the preliminary findings point to the need for a more coherent approach to information governance and access, a more collaborative approach to release information, and improvements in the request process, notably with respect to timeframes and extensions and a more active engagement with requesters¹⁵³. Moreover, some stakeholders have pointed out to the need to address certain shortcomings of the mechanism in some reported instances, such as the excessively high costs of accessing information held by the Government, the existing restrictions on access to information across the criminal justice system, and the need to increase the accessibility to public information for marginalised groups¹⁵⁴.

Rising challenges that journalists face in the performance of their work are aimed to be addressed with new initiatives. First, civil society organisations and journalists' associations have reported a deteriorating trend of the professional environment for journalists¹⁵⁵. In 2022 the Mapping Media Freedom platform registered three incidents in Ireland, the highest number since 2017, whereas two new incidents have been already reported since January 2023¹⁵⁶. There is also a particular concern as regards the increase of cases of online abuses, especially targeting female journalists, which sometimes also translate in physical harassment, as well as the increase in the recourse to strategic lawsuits against public participation (or SLAPPs) against media organisations¹⁵⁷. In 2022, the National Union of Journalists and other media organisations established together with the national police the Media Engagement Group with a view to discuss threats and violence against journalists and monitor journalists' safety¹⁵⁸. The Media Engagement Group is chaired by the senior leadership of the national police and includes representatives from the media sector, the Department of Justice, and the Department of Tourism, Culture, Arts, Gaeltacht, Sports and Media. It is intended to work as a direct reporting system to the police on which journalists that experience physical or online abuses can rely, also in cases where such incidents do not escalate to the level of formal complaints that require criminal investigation¹⁵⁹. Second, the Government has also pledged to establish a new Media Fund in 2023 primarily intended to support, on a platform-neutral basis, public-interest media content¹⁶⁰. On this basis, two new schemes¹⁶¹, managed by the Media Commission, will be prioritised for implementation with the aim of promoting the provision of additional public service content, and supporting independent journalism, freedom of expression and local democracy¹⁶².

Some progress has been made to improve the professional environment for journalists, as a General Scheme of the Defamation (Amendment) Bill has been published. The 2022 Rule of Law Report recommended to Ireland to “continue the reform of the Defamation Act to improve the professional environment for journalists taking into account European standards on the protection of journalists”¹⁶³. The shortcomings of the defamation regime in Ireland have been a long-standing issue¹⁶⁴. In particular, the absence of measures designed to counter SLAPP cases and the lack of safeguards in relation to the unpredictably high costs that might occur in the context of defamation lawsuits¹⁶⁵ has been often mentioned by journalists and other media stakeholders as an issue generating a chilling effect over freedom of information and the journalistic work¹⁶⁶. In March 2023, the Government published the General Scheme of the Defamation (Amendment) Bill with a view to present a full bill before the Parliament by the end of 2023¹⁶⁷. The General Scheme takes into account several recommendations formulated in the Report on the Review of the Defamation Act published in March 2022 by the Irish Department of Justice¹⁶⁸. In particular, it abolishes the use of juries in High Court defamation cases with a view to reduce the risks of disproportionate and unpredictable damages awards and introduces rules to counteract SLAPPs¹⁶⁹. Considering these developments, there has been some progress in relation to the recommendation made in the 2022 Rule of Law Report.

IV. OTHER INSTITUTIONAL ISSUES RELATED TO CHECKS AND BALANCES

Ireland has a bicameral parliamentary system: Parliament comprises a Lower House, and an Upper House. Government Ministers and members of Parliament have the right of legislative initiative. Constitutional review is carried out by the High Court with a right of appeal to the Court of Appeal and the Supreme Court. The Irish Human Rights and Equality Commission (IHREC) is Ireland's National Human Rights and Equality Institution. The Offices of the Ombudsman and Information Commissioner are independent both by law and in practice. Other relevant institutions in the system of checks and balances are the Ombudsman for the Defence Forces, the Ombudsman for Children's Office and the National Disability Authority.

¹⁶⁵ The current defamation laws do not provide for any limit or cap to the award of damages in defamation cases, which can therefore open the door to theoretically limitless damages payments, 2022 Media Pluralism Monitor, country report for Ireland, p. 8; Contribution from the Law Society of Ireland for the 2023 Rule of Law Report p. 23, as confirmed by information received in the context of the country visit to Ireland from RTÉ and the National Union of Journalists. On the other hand, some stakeholders welcomed the exclusion of a cap on damages as guidance in relation to damages was set out in recent Supreme Court judgments, in particular McDonagh v Sunday Newspapers (where the Supreme Court set out a proportionality test) and Higgins v Irish Aviation Authority (where the Supreme Court set out guidelines in relation to the amount of damages that should be awarded based on the seriousness of the defamation, including a suggested maximum of EUR 300 000 (except in exceptional cases)), Law Society of Ireland (2023), General Scheme of the Defamation (Amendment) Bill – Submission to the Joint Oireachtas on Justice.

¹⁶⁹ Draft General Scheme – Defamation (Amendment) Bill. Although the measures included in the General Scheme have been overall welcomed, some stakeholders have nevertheless regretted the non-inclusion of a cap on damages. Similarly, there has been criticism for the non-inclusion of a general “serious harm” test, which under the General Scheme only applies in cases involving bodies corporate, public authorities and retailers. In particular, such test requires claimants to show that the alleged defamation was likely to cause serious harm to their reputation, contributing to reducing the number of unwarranted or vexatious defamation lawsuits, International Press Institute (2023), Ireland: How the wealthy and powerful abuse legal system to silence reporting; The Irish Times (2023), The Irish Times view on defamation reform: time to act; NewsBrands Ireland (2023), NewsBrands Ireland welcomes today's publication of draft legislation to reform Ireland's Defamation Laws.

The use of the so-called ‘guillotine motions’ to shorten the time allocated to debate legislative proposals and motions has continued. As referred in previous Rule of Law Reports¹⁷⁰, the legislative process has been characterised, since the beginning of the pandemic, by the use of the so-called ‘guillotine motions’. In 2022, 56 such motions were prepared in the Lower House in relation to the bills that were passed and enacted and of those, 27 motions were used in order to shorten the debate¹⁷¹. In the Upper House, 38 motions were prepared and seven motions were moved¹⁷². The Speaker of the Lower House has criticised this practice and its significant increase since 2020¹⁷³. Moreover, civil society has also raised concerns regarding the continued rushing of legislation at the end of parliamentary terms¹⁷⁴, as also expressed by the President of Ireland in July 2021¹⁷⁵ and reiterated in December 2022¹⁷⁶.

The Irish Human Rights and Equality Commission has received additional funding. As announced in the 2022 Rule of Law Report¹⁷⁷, the Government has provided additional funding to IHREC following its accreditation with A status by the UN Global Alliance of National Human Rights Institutions (GANHRI). IHREC has continued its activities, focusing on the protection of rights of persons facing barriers to justice, influencing legislation and policy, engaging with organisations to address discrimination and human rights abuses, and raising awareness on human rights and equality issues¹⁷⁸. According to IHREC, there has been an increase of parliamentary citations of their recommendations and a high-level and consistent media presence at national level of the activities carried out by the Commission¹⁷⁹.

On 1 January 2023, Ireland had two leading judgments of the European Court of Human Rights pending implementation, the same number as the previous year¹⁸⁰. At that time, Ireland’s rate of leading judgments from the past 10 years that remain pending was at 50% (compared to 33% in 2022) and the average time that the judgments had been pending implementation was 10 years and 7 months (compared to 9 years and 7 months in 2022¹⁸¹). The latter is affected by the length of non-implementation of the two judgments which have been pending for over 8 years¹⁸². On 15 June 2023, the number of leading judgments pending implementation remains two¹⁸³.

There has been some progress to address concerns on funding of NGOs, as an Electoral Commission has been established and charged to review legal provisions. The 2022 Rule of Law Report recommended to Ireland to “take measures to address legal obstacles related to access to funding for civil society organisations”¹⁸⁴. Civic space in Ireland remains open¹⁸⁵. As referred in the 2022 Rule of Law Report¹⁸⁶, civil society organisations have raised concerns about the impact of the prohibitions under the Electoral Act to receive donations above a certain threshold for ‘political purposes’ or from foreign donors¹⁸⁷. In February 2023, an Electoral Commission was established and started its functions. The Commission will shortly commence a comprehensive review of the Electoral Act to address, alongside other matters, the issues raised by civil society organisations¹⁸⁸. The results of this review and the way how the legal obstacles related to access to funding for civil society organisations will be addressed are yet to be seen. The Electoral Commission has not yet produced its findings, therefore there has been some progress in relation to the recommendation made in the 2022 Rule of Law Report.

Initiatives were taken aimed at encouraging the participation of the public and civil society in policy making. A Citizens’ Assembly, which brings together citizens to discuss and consider important legal and policy issues, subsequently makes recommendations and reports back to Parliament. In 2022, two Citizen’s Assemblies took place¹⁸⁹. One reflected on “how to respond to the loss of biodiversity” and “a directly elected mayor for Dublin”, while another Citizens’ Assembly on drugs use started in April 2023. Moreover, in November 2022 the first National Civic Forum for formal dialogue between Government and the Community and Voluntary sector was held¹⁹⁰. The Forum focused on how to further improve policymaking and programming and how to make these more participative and open. The Forum also reflected on the future and what types of organisations should be included¹⁹¹.
