Proposal for a

DIRECTIVE OF THE EUROPEAN PARLIAMENT AND OF THE COUNCIL

amending Directive 2011/36/EU on preventing and combating trafficking in human beings and protecting its victims

THE EUROPEAN PARLIAMENT AND THE COUNCIL OF THE EUROPEAN UNION,

Having regard to the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union, and in particular Article 82(2) and 83(1) thereof,

Having regard to the proposal from the European Commission,

After transmission of the draft legislative act to the national parliaments,

[Having regard to the opinion of the European Economic and Social Committee<sup>1</sup>,

Having regard to the opinion of the Committee of the Regions<sup>2</sup>,]

Acting in accordance with the ordinary legislative procedure,

Whereas:

- (1) Trafficking in human beings is a serious crime, often committed within the framework of organised crime, a gross violation of fundamental rights and explicitly prohibited by the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union. Preventing and combatting trafficking in human beings, and supporting victims of trafficking, regardless of their country of origin, remains a priority for the Union and the Member States.

- (1a) Trafficking in human beings has different root causes. Poverty, conflict, inequality, gender-based violence, the absence of viable employment opportunities or social support, humanitarian crisis, statelessness and discrimination are among the main factors that make persons, especially women, children and members of marginalised groups, vulnerable to trafficking.
- (2) Directive 2011/36/EU of the European Parliament and the Council<sup>3</sup> constitutes the main Union legal instrument on preventing and combating trafficking in human beings and protecting the victims of this crime. That Directive sets out a comprehensive framework to address trafficking in human beings by establishing minimum rules concerning the definition of criminal offences and sanctions. It also includes common provisions to strengthen prevention, and the assistance and protection of victims, taking into account the gender, disability and child perspectives and a victim-centred approach.
- 2(a) Trafficking in human beings can be exacerbated where it intersects with discrimination based on sex and other grounds of discrimination prohibited by Union law. Member States should therefore pay due regard to victims affected by such intersectional discrimination and the resulting increased vulnerability, through providing specific measures where intersecting forms of discrimination are present. Particular attention should be paid to discrimination based on racial and ethnic origin.

<sup>3</sup> Directive 2011/36/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council of 5 April 2011 on preventing and combating trafficking in human beings and protecting its victims, and replacing Council Framework Decision 2002/629/JHA, OJ L 101, 15.4.2011, p. 1–11.

- (3) The EU Strategy on Combatting Trafficking in Human Beings 2021-2025<sup>4</sup> sets out a policy response adopting a multi-disciplinary and comprehensive approach from prevention through protection of victims, to prosecution and conviction of traffickers. It included a series of actions to be implemented with the strong involvement of civil society organisations. In order to address evolving trends in the area of trafficking in human beings, as well as shortcomings identified by the Commission, and to further step up efforts against this crime, it is necessary, nevertheless, to amend Directive 2011/36/EU. Identified shortcomings of the criminal law response requiring an adaptation of the legal framework relate to offences concerning trafficking in human beings committed in the interest of legal persons, to the data collection system, to the cooperation and coordination at Union and national level, to the national systems aimed at the early detection, identification of, specialised assistance to and support for victims of trafficking.
- (4) The exploitation of surrogacy, of forced marriage, or of illegal adoption can already fall within the scope of offences concerning trafficking in human beings as defined in the Directive, to the extent that all criteria constituting the said offences are fulfilled. However, in view of the gravity of those practices and in order to tackle the steady increase of the number and relevance of offences concerning trafficking in human beings committed for purposes other than sexual or labour exploitation, the exploitation of surrogacy, of forced marriage, or of illegal adoption should be included as forms of exploitation in Directive 2011/36/EU, insofar as these fulfil the constitutive elements of trafficking in human beings, including the means criteria. As concerns more specifically the trafficking for the exploitation of surrogacy, this should target those who coerce or deceive women into acting as surrogate mothers. The rules in this Directive are without prejudice to the definitions of marriage, adoption, forced marriage and illegal adoption, or offences related thereto other than trafficking, where provided in national or international law. It is also without prejudice to the national rules on surrogacy, including in the context of criminal law as well as family law.

<sup>4</sup> Communication from the Commission to the European Parliament, the Council, the European Economic and Social Committee and the Committee of the Regions on the EU Strategy on Combatting Trafficking in Human Beings 2021–2025, COM(2021) 171 final, 14.4.2021.

- (4a) Children placed in residential and closed-type institutions are a group particularly vulnerable to trafficking in human beings. They can fall victim of trafficking when being placed in these institutions, during their placement and after.
- (4b) Children are considered one of the most vulnerable groups targeted by organised criminal groups involved in trafficking of human beings. These children are often exploited by criminal groups by being recruited into joining organised criminal groups to later commit criminal activities. Member States should promote or offer regular and specialised training to professionals likely to come into contact with these children to detect and identify these victims.
- (5) An increasing number of offences concerning trafficking in human beings is committed or facilitated by means of information or communication technologies. Traffickers frequently use the internet and social media, inter alia to recruit, advertise or exploit victims, exercise control and organise transport. Internet and social media are also used to distribute exploitative materials. Information technology also hampers timely detection of the crime and identification of the victims and perpetrators. ■
- (5a) The existing legal framework in Directive 2011/36/EU already includes, within the scope of the definition of trafficking in human beings, crimes committed with the use of information and communication technologies, for example in the recruitment and exploitation of victims, the organisation of their transport and accommodation, advertising victims online and reaching out to potential clients, controlling victims and communicating between perpetrators, included all related financial transactions. In order to address this modus operandi of traffickers, law enforcement needs to improve its digital capabilities and expertise, to keep up with technological developments. Furthermore, Member States are invited to consider preventative measures, in particular to discourage demand, that address the issue of abuse of online services for trafficking in human beings.

- (5b) Moreover, the level of penalties should reflect the higher concern for more serious conducts, and for the more harmful and longer-lasting impact these have on the victims. This includes the amplifying effect of the dissemination of exploitative material, also in closed groups accessible to a limited number of participants. Therefore, it is necessary to provide for an aggravating circumstance related to the dissemination of images or videos or similar material of a sexual nature involving the victim, by means of information and communication technologies.
- (5c) While there is no obligation to increase sentences, Member States should ensure that the judge or the court is able to take the aggravating circumstances set out in this Directive into account when sentencing offenders. It remains within the discretion of the judge or the court to determine whether to increase the sentence due to the specific aggravating circumstances, taking into account all the facts of the particular case. Member States should not be obliged to provide for aggravating circumstances where national law provides for the criminal offence of dissemination of images or videos or similar material of a sexual nature involving the victim, by means of information and communication technologies, as a separate criminal offence and this may lead to more severe sanction.
- (6) In order to enhance the criminal justice response to offences concerning trafficking in human beings committed for the benefit of legal persons and to deter the commission of those offences, ■ the sanctions regime against legal persons should be clarified and brought in line with other Union criminal law instruments. According to Directive 2014/24/EU, Directive 2014/25/EU and Directive 2014/23/EU, a conviction by a final judgement for child labour and other forms of trafficking in human beings is a ground for an exclusion from participation in a procurement procedure or a concession award procedure. Nevertheless, Member States may also decide to include exclusion from tender procedures or concessions among the criminal or non-criminal sanctions or measures which can be imposed on legal persons, in order to also cover procurements and concessions below the thresholds of the relevant directives.

- (7) ■ Directive [2014/42/EU] lays down minimum rules on the freezing and confiscation of the instrumentalities and proceeds of crime in criminal matters, and is applicable to the criminal offences covered by Directive 2011/36/EU. The provisions of Directive 2011/36/EU on freezing and confiscation are therefore obsolete and should be repealed.
- (7a) In order to facilitate the payment of compensation to victims, Member States may establish a national victims fund or similar instruments, which may include laws that ensure the compensation of victims of human trafficking.
- (7b) In order to reinforce national policy responses, it is necessary to establish National Anti-Trafficking Coordinators or equivalent mechanisms, and Member States should be able to establish independent bodies. It falls within the competence of the Member States to decide which entities are designated or established as national anti-trafficking coordinators, equivalent mechanisms or independent bodies, regardless of their title, in accordance with the principle of procedural autonomy of the Member States, provided that such entities have the necessary competences to carry out the tasks provided for in this Directive.
- (7c) Article 8 of Directive 2011/36/EU sets out the possibility of non-prosecution and non-application of penalties of victims of trafficking in relation to criminal offences that they have been compelled to commit as a direct consequence of being subject to trafficking. It is appropriate to expand its scope to all unlawful activities that victims have been compelled to commit as a direct consequence of being subject of trafficking, such as administrative offences related to prostitution, begging, loitering or undeclared work, or other acts which are not criminal in nature but subject to administrative or pecuniary sanctions, in accordance with national law, in order to further encourage the victims to report the crime or seek for support and assistance and reassure them of the possibilities of not being held responsible.

- (8) In order to enhance the national capability to detect and identify victims at an early stage, and to refer them to the appropriate protection, assistance and support services, it is necessary to establish by laws, regulations or administrative provisions one or several referral mechanisms in the Member States. Establishing formal referral mechanisms and appointing a national focal point for the cross-border referral of victims are essential measures to enhance cross-border cooperation. A referral mechanism should be a transparent, accessible and harmonised framework facilitating the early detection, identification, support and assistance of the victims of trafficking and their referral to the responsible national organisations and bodies. Such a framework should identify the participating competent authorities, civil society organisations and other stakeholders and set out their respective responsibilities, including the procedures and the line of communication. These mechanisms can take the form of a set of established procedures, guidelines, cooperation arrangements or protocols. A referral mechanism should apply to all victims and to all forms of trafficking offences taking into account the individual vulnerability of the victims. The focal point should serve as a point of contact for the cross-border referral of victims in the relations between the authorities or institutions responsible for the cross-border support of victims in the different Member States, but not for the victims themselves. They can be based on existing mechanisms or governance structures and will not have to replace national complaint mechanisms or hotlines. Member States are encouraged to have one single referral mechanism in place when the organisation of public administration allows for this.
- (8a) In order to improve the assistance and support to victims of trafficking in human beings, Member States should ensure that victims have access to shelters and safe accommodation equipped to accommodate the specific needs of victims of trafficking of human beings. In order to reinforce the safety of presumed or identified victims, Member States are encouraged to require that personnel coming in contact with victims of trafficking in shelters do not have a criminal record of offences concerning the trafficking of human beings or of crimes or offences that lead to serious doubts about their ability to assume a role of responsibility with regards to victims.

- (8b) Member States should also ensure that victims receive assistance irrespective of their nationality or of being stateless, their citizenship, place of residence or residence status as well as form of exploitation. The assistance should aim at their full reintegration into society, which may include access to education, training and access to the labour market, in accordance with the national law, as well as a return to an independent living.
- (8c) Any measure constraining the children's liberty in order to protect them should be strictly necessary, proportionate and reasonable to the aim of protecting the individual child.
- (8d) In the context of training, and in order to ensure effective implementation of the national provisions adopted regarding the non-prosecution or non-application of penalties, Member States should raise awareness among prosecutors and law enforcement authorities likely to come in contact with victims or potential victims of trafficking in human beings.
- (8e) With a view to supporting the national policies, Member States should also develop National Anti-Trafficking Action Plans.
- (8f) In the case of children, Member States are encouraged to ensure that national child protection systems develop specific plans to prevent trafficking in human beings, including for children in residential or closed-type institutions.

- (9) In order to develop a coherent policy response to tackle demand and to further reinforce and harmonise the criminal justice efforts on demand reduction across Member States, it is important to criminalise the use of services ■ where the victim is exploited to render such services and the user of the services knew that the person providing the service is a victim of an offence concerning trafficking in human beings. Establishing this as a criminal offence is part of a comprehensive approach to reduce demand which aims to tackle the high levels of demand that fosters all forms of exploitation. The criminalisation should only target the use of services provided within the framework of exploitation covered by the offence of trafficking in human beings. The offence should therefore not apply to customers purchasing products produced under exploitative labour conditions, as they are not the users of a service. This Directive establishes a minimum legal framework in this regard, and Member States are free to adopt or maintain more stringent criminal rules. In national law, Member States may criminalise the purchase of sexual acts. This is without prejudice to the way in which Member States deal with prostitution in their domestic law.

- (9a) This directive criminalises the use of a service from a victim of trafficking in human beings when it is committed with the knowledge that the person providing the service is a victim. The notion of “knew” should be interpreted in accordance with national law. In each case, when assessing whether the user knew that the person was a victim of trafficking, and without prejudice to judicial independence, the specific circumstances of the case should be taken into account. Knowledge can be inferred from objective, factual circumstances. The circumstances may relate to, inter alia, the person of the victim, the conditions under which the services had to be provided by the victim and specific facts that could be seen as signs of control of the trafficker over the victim. With regard to circumstances relating to the person of the victim the lack of proficiency in one national or regional language, manifest signs of psychological or physical harm or of fear or the lack of knowledge of the cities or places where they have been or are, can be taken into account. With regard to circumstances relating to the conditions under which the services had to be provided, the living standards and working conditions of the provider of the service could be taken into account, as well as the condition of the premises in which the service is provided. Signs of control of the trafficker over the victim could be established when there is manifest external control measures on the provider of the service, constrained freedom of movement, or the fact that the provider of the service is not in possession of their national identity card or passport.
- (9b) Prevention and demand reduction actions should be targeted and differentiated to efficiently address the specificities of different forms of trafficking. In order to achieve the objective of discouraging and reducing the demand that fosters trafficking, it is important that Member States consider taking further appropriate action targeting potential and current users, such as offering specifically designed awareness raising campaigns.
- (9c) Persons with disabilities, in particular women and children, are at an increased risk of becoming victims of trafficking. Member States should consider the specific needs of victims of trafficking with disabilities when providing these victims with support measures.

- (9d) Stateless persons are at greater risk of becoming victims of trafficking in human beings. In the application of this Directive, it is important to pay particular attention to this vulnerable group.
- (10) The collection of accurate, coherent and anonymised data and the timely publication of collected data and statistics are fundamental to ensure full knowledge on the scope of trafficking in human beings within the Union. Introducing a requirement for Member States to collect and report to the Commission statistical data on trafficking in human beings every year in a harmonised way is expected to constitute a relevant step to enhance the general understanding of the phenomenon and to ensure the adoption of data-informed policies and strategies. ■
- (10b) Member States should take into account the specific situation of vulnerability of victims of trafficking in need of international protection in asylum procedures, including, where applicable, through special procedural guarantees and special reception needs in accordance with Directive (EU) XX/YY of the European Parliament and of the Council [Proposed Directive on laying down standards for the reception of applicants for international protection].
- (10c) To prevent victims from being re trafficked within the Union, it is important that when transferring victims under Regulation XX/YYYY [...], Member States do not transfer victims to a Member State where there are substantial grounds for believing that the victims, because of the transfer to that Member State, would face a real risk of violation of their fundamental rights that amounts to inhuman or degrading treatment within the meaning of Article 4 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union.
- (10d) Victims have the right to apply for international protection or equivalent national status. They may also benefit from a residence permit under Council Directive 2004/81/EC, where applicable. Therefore, Member States should ensure that these two procedures are complementary and do not preclude one another.

- (11) Since the objectives of this Directive, namely preventing and combating trafficking in human beings and protecting the victims of this crime, cannot be sufficiently achieved by the Member States and can therefore, by reason of the scale and effect of the action, be better achieved at Union level, the Union may adopt measures in accordance with the principle of subsidiarity as set out in Article 5 of the Treaty on European Union. In accordance with the principle of proportionality, as set out in that Article, this Directive does not go beyond what is necessary to achieve that objective.
- (12) The Directive respects the fundamental rights and observes the principles recognised by the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, in particular the respect and protection of human dignity, the prohibition of slavery, forced labour and trafficking in human beings, the right to physical and mental integrity of the person, the prohibition of torture and inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, the right to liberty and security, the protection of personal data, the freedom of expression and information, the freedom to choose an occupation and right to engage in work, the equality between women and men, the rights of the child, the rights of persons with disabilities, and the prohibition of child labour, the right to an effective remedy and to a fair trial, the principles of legality and proportionality of criminal offences and penalties. In particular, this Directive seeks to ensure full respect for these rights and principles, which are to be implemented accordingly.
- (13) ■ In accordance with Article 3 and Article 4a(1) of Protocol No 21 on the position of the United Kingdom and Ireland in respect of the area of freedom, security and justice, annexed to the Treaty on European Union and to the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union, Ireland has notified ■ , by letter of 20 April 2023<sup>5</sup>, ■ its wish to take part in the adoption and application of this Directive.
- (14) In accordance with Articles 1 and 2 of the Protocol on the position of Denmark annexed to the Treaty on European Union and to the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union, Denmark is not taking part in the adoption of this Directive and is not bound by it or subject to its application.

(15) In accordance with the Joint Political Declaration of 28 September 2011 of Member States and the Commission on explanatory documents<sup>6</sup>, Member States have undertaken to accompany, in justified cases, the notification of their transposition measures with one or more documents explaining the relationship between the components of a directive and the corresponding parts of national transposition instruments. With regard to this Directive, the legislator considers the transmission of such documents to be justified.

(16) Directive 2011/36/EU should therefore be amended accordingly,
