

DRAFT

COUNCIL DIRECTIVEon Faster and Safer Relief of Excess Withholding Taxes

THE COUNCIL OF THE EUROPEAN UNION,

Having regard to the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union, and in particular Article 115 thereof,

Having regard to the proposal from the European Commission,

After transmission of the draft legislative act to the national parliaments,

Having regard to the opinion of the European Parliament¹,

Having regard to the opinion of the European Economic and Social Committee²,

Acting in accordance with a special legislative procedure,

- (1) Ensuring fair taxation in the internal market and the good functioning of the Capital Markets Union (CMU) are among the key political priorities for the European Union (EU). In this context, removing obstacles to cross-border investment, while combating tax fraud and abuse is critical. Such obstacles exist, for example, in cases where inefficient and disproportionately burdensome procedures exist to relieve excess taxes withheld at source on dividend or interest income paid on shares or bonds traded publicly to non-resident investors. In addition, in some cases, current situation has proven inadequate in preventing recurring risks of tax fraud, evasion and avoidance, as shown by the Cum/Ex and Cum/Cum scandals. Therefore, this Directive seeks to make withholding tax procedures more efficient, while strengthening them against the risk of tax fraud and abuse.

- (2) In order to strengthen Member States' ability to prevent and fight potential tax fraud or abuse, which is currently hampered by a general lack of reliable and timely information on investors, it is necessary to provide the possibility of a common framework for the relief of excess withholding taxes on cross-border investments in securities that are resilient to a risk of tax fraud or abuse. This framework should lead to convergence among the various relief procedures applied in the Member States while ensuring transparency and certainty on investors' identity for securities' issuers, withholding tax agents, financial intermediaries and Member States, as the case may be. To this effect, the framework should rely on automated procedures, such as the digitalisation of the certificate of tax residence (in terms of procedure and form). Such a framework should also be flexible enough to duly take into account the various systems applicable in different Member States while providing appropriate anti-abuse tools to mitigate risks of tax fraud, evasion and avoidance. In this regard, it is necessary to take into consideration the different positions of tax authorities depending on the relief system in place. Under the relief at source system, tax authorities are able to obtain, after the relief is applied, relevant information of the investors and the payment chain. On the contrary, where a refund system is applied, it is crucial for the tax authorities to obtain, before the relief is applied, adequate information in order to assess whether the relief should be granted. In both relief systems rules on the liability of the financial intermediary are established in case of undue refund. This Directive does not restrict Member States' ability to regulate the means by which certified financial intermediaries recoup any outlay adapting to, or complying with the obligations it sets.

(2a) Considering these differences and also the principle of proportionality, the provisions of this Directive regarding national registers of certified financial intermediaries and obligations to report information should not be binding to those Member States that have a comprehensive relief at source system and a market capitalisation ratio below a certain threshold, as defined in this Directive. The objective of promoting efficient and robust systems for the relief of excess withholding tax across the Single Market should be considered achieved when Member States that maintain their national system for relief fulfil both these criteria as defined in this Directive. First, the market capitalisation criterion correlates with the size of the economy and the possible scale of dividend payments. Low market capitalisation implies low volumes of dividend distributions and therefore a lower risk of tax abuse. When a Member State reaches or exceeds the market capitalisation ratio for a certain period of time, the common rules of this Directive should irrevocably apply. Second, the comprehensive relief at source systems allowing for the application of the appropriate tax rate at the time of payment in a straightforward and efficient manner should be considered equivalent to the relief at source system set out in this Directive. These criteria jointly can ensure that investors across the Single Market have effective access to efficient procedures for excess withholding tax relief in all Member States. For those Member States who have a relatively small stock market and a sufficiently efficient national system, modifications of these systems would not be considered proportionate. Furthermore, as the common rules of this Directive would nearly cover the whole Single Market, an appropriate convergence would therefore be achieved.

- (2b) This Directive harmonises the access to systems of relief for investors in all Member States by providing a regulation on the relief at source system and the quick refund system, still leaving the possibility for Member States to maintain their national regulation of relief at source systems, under certain conditions and taking into account the differences in development of Member States' economies, while ensuring the access to systems of relief in Member States. In any case, depending on risk assessment criteria, the concerned Member States that would consider it appropriate to, for example, strengthen the instruments to combat tax fraud and abuse, may apply the tools provided for in this Directive.
- (2c) In order to be considered as comprehensive, the national relief at source system should contain a number of specific key features as set out in this Directive. It provides broad access to a natural person or entity that is entitled to such relief. The national system provides relief if the taxpayer is entitled to, except in case of failure to report the required information determined by the Member State. In principle, the required information cannot go beyond the data referred to in Articles 11, 12 or 13a. The national system provides access for both direct and indirect investments and should not have additional entry barriers other than those provided in Article 10(2). Thus, the national system should not only provide the legal possibility to relief, but relief should also be de facto granted, when the taxpayer is entitled to it. The national system should not impose an additional obligation such as a parallel system of reporting. The Member State should lay down rules on liability for the loss of withholding tax revenue and penalties applicable to infringements of national provisions on that relief at source system. With regards to the condition of the market capitalisation ratio the European Securities and Markets Authority should provide the required data according to the regulatory technical standards. Where a Member State does not or no longer fulfils at least one of the two aforementioned conditions (concerning the comprehensive relief at source system and the market capitalisation ratio threshold), it should transpose into national legislation all provisions of this Directive.

- (3) To ensure a proportionate approach, this Directive should cover procedures to relieve excess withholding taxes only in those Member States that apply withholding tax on cash or stock dividends at different rates depending on the specific investor's tax residence. In such cases, Member States need to provide relief where a higher rate has been applied in a situation for which a lower rate is applicable. Member States should also have the opportunity to implement similar procedures in relation to interest payments to non-residents on publicly traded bonds, to improve the efficiency of the relevant relief procedure and ensure a higher level of taxpayers' compliance. Member States that do not need relief procedures in relation to excess withholding taxes on dividends, and interest, as the case may be, are not concerned by the procedures referred to in this Directive. Where a relief of excess withholding taxes is needed, and to ensure a common access to the relief of excess withholding taxes, this Directive should regulate a common relief at source system and a quick refund system to be implemented by Member States.
- (4) Given that investors may be located in any Member State, rules for a common and digital tax residence certificate (eTRC) should apply in all Member States. To ensure that all EU taxpayers have access to a common, appropriate and effective proof of their residence for tax purposes, Member States should use automated procedures for the issuance of tax residence certificates for the purposes of the application of a relief at source system, a comprehensive relief at source system, a quick refund system or a standard refund system in order to obtain relief of excess withholding tax on dividends paid for publicly traded shares, or interests paid for publicly traded bonds, if applicable. Moreover, eTRC's should be issued in the same recognisable and acceptable digital form and with the same content.

To allow greater efficiency, the certificate should cover a maximum period of the calendar year or of the fiscal year (such as a straddle fiscal year or a fiscal year longer than one calendar year) for which it is issued and remain valid for certifying residence for that covered period. The issuing Member States should be able to completely or partially invalidate an eTRC if the tax authorities have evidence that the taxpayer is not a resident of the issuing Member State for all or part of the covered period. In order to allow for an efficient identification of EU entities, the certificate should include the tax identification number or, in its absence (where the concerned Member State doesn't issue such number for taxpayers), a functional equivalent for tax purposes and, where the issuing authority of the certificate possesses this data, the European Unique Identifier (EUID) or the legal entity identifier (LEI) or any legal entity registration number which is valid for the entire covered period. Moreover, in case a tax identification number does not exist for a natural person because the Member State of residence does not issue such number for taxpayers, the use of a functional equivalent for tax purposes is also foreseen. The used identifiers should be valid for the entire covered period. The eTRC shall contain a reference to the double tax treaty, for which a taxpayer requests to be considered resident for tax purposes, where applicable. In order for the eTRC to be recognised by the source Member State as valid proof of residence, when the relief of withholding tax is claimed under the provisions of a double tax treaty, it is essential that the applicable double tax treaty is mentioned on the eTRC. The issuing authority may choose to mention more than one applicable double tax treaty on a given certificate. While primarily intended for the implementation of the withholding tax procedures, the eTRC can also have a wider scope of application and serve for proving the residence for tax purposes beyond withholding tax procedures. For the purposes of relief of withholding tax procedures, the eTRC cannot include any additional information. The eTRC is intended to be issued once during the calendar year or once during the fiscal year, even when the same taxpayer invests on multiple occasions in the same source Member States, as long as the taxpayer's residence for tax purposes remains the same.

- (5) To fulfil the objective of more efficient relief of excess withholding tax, common procedures should be implemented across the Union, which allow to quickly obtain clear and secure information on the identity of the investor especially in case of large investor bases, that is, in relation to investment to publicly traded securities, where identifying the identity of the individual investors is challenging. Such procedures should also, as a second step, allow for the application of the appropriate tax rate at the time of payment (relief at source) or for the quick reimbursement of any excess amount of tax paid. Given that cross-border investments usually involve a payment chain of financial intermediaries, relevant procedures should equally allow for the tracing and identification of the chain of intermediaries and, consequently, of the income flow from the issuer of the security to the registered owner and information about the underlying investor. The most common types of investment arrangements will usually involve a custodian bank or another investment entity (such as a broker) who holds the securities, in its name, on behalf of the underlying investor. In these types of arrangements, it is the underlying investor who would be considered to be the registered owner in relation to the securities. Member States that apply withholding tax on income from securities and provide relief for excess tax and do not have in place a comprehensive relief at source system or have a market capitalisation ratio equal to or above the threshold set out in this Directive, should therefore establish and maintain a national register of those financial intermediaries that have a significant role in the payment chain. Once registered such financial intermediaries should be required to report information available to them about the dividend or interest payments, if applicable, that they handle. The information required should be limited to information that is crucial to reconstruct the payment chain and therefore useful to prevent risks of fraud or abuse, to the extent that such information is available to the reporting intermediary. Member States that apply withholding tax on interest at varying rates and need to engage in similar relief procedures, or have in place a comprehensive relief at source system for dividend payments and have a market capitalisation ratio below the threshold set out in this Directive, may also consider using the established national register, as the case may be.

- (6) As the financial intermediaries most often engaged in the securities' payment chains are large institutions as defined in the Capital Requirements Regulation (CRR) as well as central securities depositories providing withholding tax agent services, these entities should be obliged to request registration on the national registers of Member States. Where these entities, with registration obligation, operate through a branch or branches or one or more subsidiaries in any Member State, these entities should be permitted to choose fulfilling the registration obligation in each source Member State either as one certified financial intermediary at group level or at individual branch or subsidiary level or a combination thereof. Other financial intermediaries should be also allowed to request registration on the national registers of Member States at their discretion. In both situations, either under mandatory or voluntary registration, financial intermediaries should have the flexibility to register themselves or to be represented by another financial intermediary that acts on their behalf in order to minimise the administrative burden and impact on how they wish to be organised. Registration should be requested by the financial intermediary itself by submitting an application through the European Certified Financial Intermediary Portal that should serve as a single entry point. These applications should be forwarded, through the European Certified Financial Intermediary Portal, to the relevant Member States. Subsequently, the Member States should decide on the application for registration. Therefore the portal should serve as a tool that reflects the decisions of the Member States with regard to the registrations of the financial intermediaries.

This directive should also foresee rules on the requirements for such registration as well as rules on refusal thereof. In case of rejection of registration, financial intermediaries should still be permitted to apply for registration at a later stage, if the grounds for rejection are resolved. Once registered, financial intermediaries should be considered “certified financial intermediaries” in the respective Member State and should be subjected to the relevant reporting and notification obligations under this Directive while granted the right to request application of the relief procedures set out in this Directive. Member States should update the European Certified Financial Intermediary Portal on the registration of a certified financial intermediary. Rules on removing from the national register or on denying access from the systems of relief should also be foreseen by this Directive. Where a Member State decides to remove, denies access to relief systems or rejects a registration request, it should update the European Certified Financial Intermediary Portal accordingly. The purpose of such notification is to allow them to evaluate the measures taken, the removal or the rejection and consider it in the context of any future registration request by the same financial intermediary in their own national register. National legislation of the Member States concerned applies to the rights and obligations of parties concerned, including the right to appeal, in relation to any decision taken by a Member State in connection with registration and removal from their national register.

- (7) To ensure more transparency on the identity and the circumstances of the investor receiving a dividend or interest payment as well as on the flow of the payment from the issuer, certified financial intermediaries should report within specific timelines, a relevant set of information. Two reporting options should be provided in this Directive: a direct and an indirect reporting. Where the reporting is direct, a certified financial intermediary should report directly to the competent authority of the source Member State. Where the reporting is indirect, the information should be provided by the certified financial intermediaries along the securities payment chain in a sequential order, and in respect of the position of these certified financial intermediaries in the securities payment chain in which they are part of. The outcome should be that this information reaches the withholding tax agent or a designated certified financial intermediary, who reports the information to the competent authority of the source Member State. The reported data should include information on the eligibility of the investor concerned, but should be limited to the information that is available to the reporting certified financial intermediary. Financial intermediaries that are not under an obligation to register as certified financial intermediaries and have opted not to register as such, should not have reporting obligations under this Directive. Nevertheless, information on the payments handled by such intermediaries that are not certified financial intermediaries remains relevant for the proper reconstruction of the payment chain before applying the relief systems set out in this Directive.

- (7a) To ensure there are no information gaps in the payment chain and to enable investors to access the relief procedures, the Directive should allow a certified financial intermediary, who may not be directly involved in a specific payment chain, to step into the role of a financial intermediary within that chain that is not a certified financial intermediary. This implies that the certified financial intermediary fulfils the responsibilities and liabilities related to information reporting and the relief system that a financial intermediary would have if it were a certified financial intermediary. Through this arrangement between financial intermediaries, tax authorities should be able to obtain all relevant information and effectively reconcile information across the entire payment chain, and investors should be able to access the relief system, even in cases involving a financial intermediary that is neither registered in a Member State nor bound by the obligations pursuant to this Directive.
- (7b) Nevertheless, this Directive should not prevent certified financial intermediaries from outsourcing the tasks related to the fulfilment of their obligations under this Directive. Therefore, a certified financial intermediary should be permitted to rely on a third party to fulfil the relevant obligations on withholding tax procedures. In any case these obligations should remain under the responsibility of the certified financial intermediary that has outsourced their responsibilities.

- (8) In order to render the Capital Markets Union more effective and competitive, procedures for relief of excess withholding taxes on securities' income should be facilitated and accelerated, where adequate information has been provided by relevant certified financial intermediaries, including on the identity of the investor. The relevant certified financial intermediaries are all those certified financial intermediaries in the securities payment chain situated between the investor and the issuer of the securities, which might be required to also provide information on payments effected by non-certified financial intermediaries in the chain. Taking into account the different approaches in Member States, two types of procedures should be foreseen. Firstly, relief at source by direct application of the appropriate tax rate at the time of withholding. Secondly, a quick refund system whereby such request for refund is submitted by the certified financial intermediary and is processed by the tax authority of the source Member state within a set deadline regulated by this Directive. When these refunds are not processed within these deadlines, late payment interest shall be applied where national legislation includes such provisions. Member States that apply chapter III should be able to introduce a relief at source system or a quick refund system or a combination hereof, ensuring that at least one system is available for all investors, according to the requirements of this Directive. These Member States should be able to limit the use of one system only for specific cases, such as low-risk scenarios, provided that the other system remains available for all other cases covered by the scope of the Directive. Payments outside the scope of the Directive such as dividends from listed companies paid to registered owners that are resident of the source Member State, dividends from non-listed companies or interests when a Member State has not opted to apply this Directive for interest payments, can still apply relief of excess withholding tax under the national system applicable to the corresponding procedures.

Where relevant requirements of the Directive are not met for payments in the scope of the Directive, or the investor concerned so desires, Member States should apply national standard refund procedures of excess withholding tax relief as a fall-back system to the fast-track procedures laid down in the Directive. Investors or their authorised representatives, that are entitled to a relief, may only reclaim the excess withholding tax paid in a Member State when the certified financial intermediary did not make use of the relief at source or the quick refund procedure.

- (8a) Member States should be able to enforce anti-fraud measures and conduct thorough investigations where there is a risk of tax fraud or abuse before processing a request for a quick refund. In order to do so, Member States should have the right to reject a refund request under certain conditions. These conditions should include cases where the request requirements are not met or where the payment chain cannot be reconstructed. A refund request may also be rejected where the Member State decides to initiate any verification procedure or tax audit that is based on risk assessment criteria. These verification procedures or tax audits may be applied to any case that is identified as posing a risk to tax fraud or abuse.

- (9) In order to safeguard the systems for relief of excess withholding taxes, Member States maintaining a national register should also require certified financial intermediaries to verify the eligibility of investors that wish to claim a relief. In particular, certified financial intermediaries should collect the tax residence certificate of the relevant investor, and a declaration that such investor is entitled to the relief of withholding tax according to the legislation of the source Member State or a double tax treaty and, when required by the source Member State, is the beneficial owner with respect to the dividend or interest payment in accordance with the national legislation of the source Member State or a double tax treaty as described by the Commentary on Article 10 or Article 11 of the OECD Tax Model Convention. Thus, source Member States have the option to request the declaration on beneficial ownership. Certified financial intermediaries should be required to verify the applicable withholding tax rate based on the investor's specific circumstances and indicate if they are aware of any financial arrangement involving the underlying securities that has not been settled, expired or otherwise terminated before the ex-dividend date. In this context, this obligation should be understood in the sense that the closest certified financial intermediary to the investor (i.e. its client) should take reasonable measures to perform such checks in good faith. For example, certified financial intermediaries should check whether the information in the eTRC or its equivalent, or the information in the investor's declaration does not contradict the information collected by those certified financial intermediaries on their clients in their normal course of business such as the investor's account information and other information that they may have collected as a result of complying with applicable Know Your Customer Rules. Therefore, certified financial intermediaries should not be required to perform further examinations or to request and collect further information from their customer. Additionally, the investor should be required to inform the financial intermediary of any changes in their relevant circumstances. Member States may allow due diligence requirements to be carried out on an annual basis unless the certified financial intermediary knows or has reasons to know that there is a change of circumstances or the information is incorrect or unreliable.

- (9a) The application of the FASTER procedures relies on the alignment of the condition that the registered owner (either a natural person or an entity, who is eligible to receive the dividend or interest as the holder of the securities) is also the person who is entitled to the relief from withholding tax in accordance with the national legislation of the source Member State or a double tax treaty, where applicable. When the registered owner is also the one who is eligible for relief, only the provisions for direct investments can apply. In situations however where there is no alignment between the registered owner and the person entitled to the relief, the provisions for indirect investments can apply. Those special provisions are foreseen in order to provide relief in cases where certain collective investment undertakings (CIU) or the investors therein may be entitled to relief but are not the registered owner because the securities are held by a different legal person or by a fiscal transparent CIU. The provisions for indirect investments ensure that legitimate investors have access to the Directive's procedures. Therefore, in the interpretation of a CIU, Member States should include CIU's which may request relief of excess withholding tax on their own behalf or by the entitled investors holding equity in a CIU based on the national legislation of the source Member State or on a double tax treaty. When involved in indirect investments, the certified financial intermediary will still have to fulfil the requirements of due diligence. Furthermore the certified financial intermediary may be held liable if there is any loss of taxes.

- (10) It is acknowledged that financial arrangements can be used to shift the ownership, in whole or in part, of a security and/or relevant investment risks. It has also been evidenced that such arrangements have been used in dividend arbitrage and dividend stripping schemes, such as the Cum/Ex and Cum/Cum schemes, with the sole purpose to obtain refunds when there was no entitlement thereto or to increase the amount of refund to which an investor was actually entitled. Arrangements such as future contracts, repurchase transaction, securities lending and securities borrowing, buy- sell back transaction or sell-buy back transaction, derivatives, margin lending transaction and contracts for difference (CFDs) may be considered as financial arrangements in case they imply a temporarily or permanent split between the natural person or entity bearing the economic risks of the investment and the legal owner of the share or underlying rights. These examples are not exhaustive. Furthermore it is understood that the ownership is not transferred to the buyer or borrower of the securities if the economic risk remains with the seller or lender of the securities through any legal transactions such as securities lending, options or future contracts. Any arrangement under which the dividend is compensated between the parties concerned, may be considered as a financial arrangement.

These concerned parties are not always compensated in cash, but may also be compensated in more indirect ways, like the difference of price in securities or derivatives. Information on financial arrangements is necessary for tax authorities to fight tax fraud and abuse. When the reporting is direct, this information should only be required from those certified financial intermediaries that, due to their position within the chain, may have been directly involved in the relevant financial arrangement, which will be the case for the certified financial intermediaries that request the relief. When the reporting is indirect, the information on financial arrangements has to be reported by the certified financial intermediary of the registered owner and this information should be reported along the security payment chain in a sequential order with an effect that it ultimately reaches the withholding tax agent or a designated certified financial intermediary. This means that other reporting certified financial intermediaries have to transmit the information on these financial arrangements to the withholding tax agent or a designated certified financial intermediary, even if these reporting certified financial intermediaries are not directly involved in the relevant financial arrangement. Reporting on financial arrangements should not be required in the case of bonds and interest payments.

- (10a) Member States should be able to restrict the use of relief at source or quick refund procedures in cases that present elevated risk of tax fraud and abuse. Therefore it is appropriate to foresee a list of such cases, where Member States have a possibility to exclude requests for relief and conduct further checks. In order to take into account the differences in the national legal systems and, in particular, tax risk assessment, such list should not be mandatory, and Member States should have discretion to determine which of such cases should be covered by the standard refund procedure. Member States should ensure that national legislation transposing this Directive does not allow that cases, which Member States consider as an elevated risk, can benefit from a relief at source or a quick refund. This measure would ensure that tax authorities are better placed to fight against abusive schemes, as they would have the possibility of conducting further checks to determine whether requests for relief are justified and should be granted. One of such cases consists of a threshold that is related to a gross dividend amount. This threshold should be calculated per registered owner, or per investor entitled to the relief of excess withholding tax if the registered owner is a collective investment undertaking or a designated legal person thereof. This threshold should not apply when a concerned collective investment undertaking established and regulated in the EU, a statutory pension scheme of a Member State or an institution for occupational retirement provision registered or authorised in a Member State in accordance with Article 9(1) of Directive (EU) 2016/2341 is entitled to the relief. These undertakings, schemes and institutions are highly regulated and subject to supervision by the national competent authorities and to robust internal controls. This enforces compliance with the relevant regulations and minimises the risk of tax fraud and abuse. Nevertheless, there are cases where taxpayers could claim the reduced withholding tax rate based on EU legislation implemented by national rules.

This would typically be the case where domestic law ensures that freedom of establishment or free movement of capital is equally granted to domestic as well as to non-domestic comparable situations, or in the case where a Directive is transposed. Such cases may require verifications, especially to assess the comparability of situations and the applicability of national law to cross-border cases. In such circumstances, it should be possible for Member States to deal with these cases under any existing national relief at source system, if such existing system requires such verifications, and thus leads to relief of excess withholding tax in the fastest and safest manner for these cases.

- (10b) Considering the important role entrusted to certified financial intermediaries to report complete and correct information, which serves as the basis for withholding tax relief or refund, it is appropriate that national legislation of Member States contains at least the rules under which certified financial intermediaries can be held liable for full or part of withholding tax revenue loss incurred due to their full or partial non-compliance with the key obligations of this Directive. Member States may establish in their national legislation strict and joint and several liability for certified financial intermediaries requesting the relief. Additionally, other aspects of liability, should continue to be fully regulated by national legislation of Member States. This may include withholding tax agents that act jointly or severally, whom are not acting as certified financial intermediaries, and instances related to either direct or indirect liability of registered owners and investors whom submit incomplete or incorrect information to certified financial intermediaries. This Directive does not determine the rules on liability regarding the standard refund system.
- (11) In order to ensure effectiveness of the applicable rules, Member States should lay down rules on penalties for infringements of national provisions adopted pursuant to this Directive. Such penalties should be effective, proportionate and dissuasive.

- (12) The proper transposition of this Directive in each Member State concerned is critical for the promotion of the CMU as a whole, as well as for the protection of the tax revenue of Member States. Member States should therefore communicate to the Commission on a regular basis, statistical information, on the implementation and enforcement in their territory of national measures adopted pursuant to this Directive. The Commission should prepare an evaluation on the basis of the information provided by Member States and other available data to evaluate the effectiveness of the applicable rules. In this context the Commission should consider the need to update the rules introduced by this Directive.
- (13) In order to ensure uniform conditions for the implementation of this Directive, in particular for the digital tax residence certificate, the European Certified Financial Intermediary Portal, the reporting of financial intermediaries, the declaration of the registered owner and the request for relief under this Directive, implementing powers should be conferred on the Commission to adopt standard forms with a limited number of components, including the linguistic arrangements. Those powers should be exercised in accordance with Regulation (EU) No 182/2011 of the European Parliament and of the Council³.

- (14) Any processing of personal data carried out within the framework of this Directive should comply with Regulation (EU) 2016/679 of the European Parliament and of the Council. Data processing is set out in this Directive also with the objective of serving a general public interest, namely the matters of taxation and the purposes of combating tax fraud, tax evasion and tax avoidance, safeguarding tax revenues and promoting fair taxation, which strengthen opportunities for social, political and economic inclusion in Member States. Therefore, for the purposes of correct application of this Directive, and in order to safeguard these objectives of general public interest, Member States should have the possibility to restrict the scope of certain data subject's rights set out in Regulation (EU) 2016/679. Nevertheless, such restrictions should not go beyond what is strictly necessary for achievement of the aforesaid objectives. In relation to the additional information that may be required pursuant to this Directive for proving the taxpayer's residence for tax purposes, collection of such information related to a natural person should be understood as being restricted to the identification of the natural person.
- (15) Since the objective of this Directive cannot sufficiently be achieved by the Member States but can rather, by reason of the cross-border nature of the transactions concerned and the need to reduce compliance costs in the internal market as a whole, be better achieved at Union level, the Union may adopt measures, in accordance with the principle of subsidiarity as set out in Article 5 of the Treaty on European Union. In accordance with the principle of proportionality as set out in that Article, this Directive does not go beyond what is necessary in order to achieve that objective.
- (16) The European Data Protection Supervisor was consulted in accordance with Article 42 of Regulation (EU) 2018/1725 of the European Parliament and of the Council⁴.

⁴ Regulation (EU) 2018/1725 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 23 October 2018 on the protection of natural persons with regard to the processing of personal data by the Union institutions, bodies, offices and agencies and on the free movement of such data, and repealing Regulation (EC) No 45/2001 and Decision No 1247/2002/EC (OJ L 295, 21.11.2018, p. 39)

CHAPTER I

GENERAL PROVISIONS

Article 1

Subject matter

This Directive lays down rules on the issuance of a digital tax residence certificate by Member States and the procedure to relieve any excess withholding tax that can be withheld by a Member State on dividends from publicly traded shares and, where applicable, interest from publicly traded bonds paid to registered owners who are resident for tax purposes outside that Member State.

Article 2

Scope

1. Chapters I and IV shall apply to all Member States. Chapter II shall apply to all Member States with regards to all natural persons and entities that are resident for tax purposes in their jurisdiction.
2. Chapter III shall irrevocably apply to all Member States that provide relief of excess withholding tax on dividends paid for publicly traded shares issued by a resident in their jurisdiction if they do not have a comprehensive relief at source system applicable in such cases or if their market capitalisation ratio is equal to or more than {1,5%} for each of the four~~two~~ consecutive years, as set out in the four~~two~~ latest publications by the European Securities and Markets Authority available on the deadline of transposition of this Directive.
3. [deleted]

4. Member States that have a comprehensive relief at source system applicable to the excess withholding tax on dividends paid for publicly traded shares issued by a resident in their jurisdiction may irrevocably apply Chapter III if their market capitalisation ratio is less than {1,5%} for at least one or each of the ~~four~~^{two} consecutive years, as set out in the ~~four~~^{two} latest publications by the European Securities and Markets Authority available on the deadline of transposition of this Directive.
5. Member States shall irrevocably apply Chapter III within ~~five~~^{three} years from the ~~fourth~~^{second} consecutive publication of the data by the European Securities and Markets Authority displaying that their market capitalisation ratio of {1,5%} is reached or exceeded during each of the ~~four~~^{two} consecutive years.
6. Member States that provide relief of excess withholding tax on interest paid for publicly traded bonds issued by a resident in their jurisdiction may apply Chapter III.

Article 3

Definitions

For the purposes of this Directive the following definitions shall apply:

- (1) ‘excess withholding tax’ means the difference between the amount of withholding tax levied by a Member State on payments to non-resident owners of dividends or interest from securities by applying the general domestic rate and the lower amount of withholding tax applicable by that Member State on the same dividends or interest in line with a double tax treaty or specific national legislation, as the case may be.
- (2) ‘publicly traded share’ means share admitted to trading on a regulated market or traded on a multilateral trading facility as defined under points 21 and 22 of Article 4(1) of Directive 2014/65/EU of 15 May 2014.

- (3) ‘publicly traded bond’ means a bond admitted to trading on a regulated market or traded on a multilateral trading facility or an organised trading facility as defined under points 21, 22 and 23 of Article 4(1) of Directive 2014/65/EU of 15 May 2014 respectively.

SYSTEMS OF RELIEF

Article 10

Request for relief at source or quick refund

1. Source Member States shall require a certified financial intermediary, maintaining the investment account of a registered owner receiving dividends distributed or interests paid by a resident in the source Member State, to request relief pursuant to Article 12 or Article 13, as applicable, on behalf of that registered owner if the following conditions are met:
 - (a) the registered owner has authorised the certified financial intermediary to request relief on its behalf; and
 - (b) the certified financial intermediary has verified and established the eligibility for the relief in accordance with Article 11 or Article 13a, as applicable.

2. Notwithstanding paragraph 1, Member States may exclude, completely or partially, requests for relief under the systems as provided for under Articles 12 and 13 for a request, where any of the following circumstances occur:
- (a) the dividend has been paid on a publicly traded share that the registered owner acquired in a transaction carried out within a period of five days before the ex-dividend date;
 - (b) the dividend payment on the underlying security for which relief is requested is linked to a financial arrangement that has not been settled, expired or otherwise terminated before the ex-dividend date;
 - (c) at least one of the financial intermediaries in the securities payment chain is not a certified financial intermediary and no certified financial intermediary has assumed the position of that financial intermediary for the purpose of Article 9 according to Article 5(4a).
 - (d) an exemption of the withholding tax is claimed;
 - (e) a reduced withholding tax rate not deriving from double tax treaties is claimed;
 - (f) the dividend payment exceeds a gross amount of at least [100.000 EUR], per registered owner and per payment date. This amount shall be determined by the gross dividend amount per investor holding equity in a collective investment undertaking when this underlying investor is entitled to the relief pursuant to Article 13a(1a)(i) or Article 13a(1a)(ii) as applicable.

This point shall not apply when the one entitled to the relief of excess withholding tax is a:

- i. statutory pension scheme of a Member State or an institution for occupational retirement provision registered or authorised in a Member State in accordance with Article 9(1) of Directive (EU) 2016/2341; or
- ii. collective investment undertaking, that is an undertaking for collective investment in transferable securities (UCITS) as defined in Article 1(2) and established in compliance with Article 1(1) of Directive 2009/65/EC, an alternative investment fund established in the European Union (EU AIF) or an alternative investment fund managed by an alternative investment fund manager established in the European Union (EU AIFM) as defined in Article 4(1)(k) and Article 4(1)(l), of Directive 2011/61/EU, respectively.

Any arrangement whereby the dividend payment is split or any collective investment undertaking other than mentioned in paragraph 2(f)(ii) that has been established with the sole purpose of remaining inferior to this amount leads to the application of this paragraph.

4. Notwithstanding paragraph 1, where a financial intermediary maintaining the investment account of a registered owner is not a certified financial intermediary, Member States shall allow a certified financial intermediary to request relief pursuant to Article 12 or Article 13, as applicable, subject to the provisions of Article 5(4a) and Article 9.
5. The systems of relief pursuant to Article 12 and Article 13, as applicable, shall not reduce the control powers of Member States, according to their national legislation, in relation to the taxable income to which such relief was applied, and do not affect the taxing rights of Member States.
6. Where a Member State has a system for relief at source or quick refund, or a combination thereof, prior to the entry into force of this Directive and where that Member State applies Chapter III pursuant to Article 2, that Member State shall ensure the compliance of its existing system with the provisions set out in Chapter III for any request of relief covered by this Directive, being dividends arising from publicly traded shares and, only where Member States decide to do so, interest from publicly traded bonds paid to non-residents. Member States may also maintain and apply an existing national relief at source system to cases referred to in paragraph 2(e) in which verifications are performed in order to:
 - i. ensure equal treatment between domestic and cross-border situations to comply with Chapters 2 and 4 of Title IV of the TFEU; or
 - ii. apply the reduced withholding tax rates in accordance with Directive 2003/49/EC or Directive 2011/96/EU.

Due diligence of registered owner's eligibility

1. Member States shall take the necessary measures to require that the certified financial intermediary requesting relief on behalf of a registered owner under Article 12 and Article 13, as applicable, obtains from such registered owner a declaration that the registered owner:
 - (a) is the one entitled to the relief of the withholding tax with respect to the dividend or interest in accordance with the national legislation of the source Member State or a double tax treaty, where applicable, including the legal basis and the applicable withholding tax rate; and
 - (aa) is the beneficial owner, when required by the source Member State, with respect to the dividend or interest in accordance with the national legislation of the source Member State or a double tax treaty, where applicable; and
 - (b) has engaged or not in a financial arrangement linked to the underlying publicly traded share that has not been settled, expired or otherwise terminated before the ex-dividend date; and
 - (c) undertakes to inform the certified financial intermediary of any change in their circumstances without undue delay.

2. Member States shall take the necessary measures to require that certified financial intermediaries requesting relief on behalf of a registered owner under Article 12 and Article 13, as applicable, verify, based on the information available to these certified financial intermediaries, the following :
- (a) the eTRC of the registered owner or a proof of tax residence in a third country deemed appropriate by the source Member State. For these purposes, a tax residence certificate with equivalent content to that provided for in Article 4(2) and that meets the technical requirements in Annex I, paragraph 1, may be deemed as an appropriate proof of tax residence in a third country by the source Member State;
 - (aa) notwithstanding point (a) of this paragraph, the documentation deemed appropriate by the source Member State, in cases where a registered owner is an entity for which an eTRC cannot be issued or that cannot obtain a proof of tax residence in a third country because the entity is disregarded for tax purposes and its income (or part thereof) is taxed at the level of the persons who have an interest in that entity, but it is entitled to the relief of the withholding tax with respect to the dividend or interest in accordance with the national legislation of the source Member State or a double tax treaty, where applicable;

- (b) the registered owner's declaration and tax residence, against the information that the certified financial intermediary has obtained or has an obligation to obtain, including but not limited to the information collected for other tax purposes or on the basis of anti-money laundering requirements, which the certified financial intermediary is subject to under Directive (EU) 2015/849, or comparable information required in third countries;
- (c) the registered owner's entitlement to a specific reduced withholding tax rate in accordance with a double tax treaty between the source Member State and the jurisdictions where the registered owner is resident for tax purposes or specific national legislation of the source Member State;
- (d) in case of a dividend payment the possible existence of any financial arrangement that has not been settled, expired or otherwise terminated at the ex-dividend date;
- (e) in case of a dividend payment, that the underlying share has been acquired by the registered owner in a transaction carried out earlier or within a period of five days before the ex-dividend date.

- 2a. Member States may allow a certified financial intermediary to obtain the declaration referred to in paragraph 1 of this Article and to carry out the verifications provided for in paragraph 2, points (a) to (c), of this Article on an annual basis unless the certified financial intermediary knows or has reasons to know that there is a change of circumstances or that the declaration or the information to be verified is incorrect or unreliable.
