Text proposed by the Commission

(4) PRM constitutes the starting material for plant production in the Union. Therefore, it is critical for the production of raw material for food and feed purposes and for the efficient use of plant resources. It contributes to environmental protection and the quality of the food chain and food supply in the Union as a whole. In this regard, the availability, quality and diversity of PRM appears to be of utmost importance to achieve the transition to sustainable food systems called for in the Farm to Fork Strategy³⁶, agriculture, horticulture, environmental protection, climate change mitigation and adaptation, food and feed security, and the economy in general.

³⁶ Communication from the Commission to the European Parliament, the European Council, the Council, the European Economic and Social Committee and the Committee of the Regions, A Farm to Fork Strategy for a fair, healthy and environmentally-friendly food system (COM(2020) 381 final).

(4) PRM constitutes the starting material for plant production in the Union. Therefore, it is critical for the production of raw material for food and feed purposes and for the efficient use of plant resources. It aims to contribute to environmental protection and the quality of the food chain and food supply in the Union as a whole. In this regard, the availability of high quality and diversity of PRM, including locally adapted varieties that can have the benefit of having a higher tolerance to biotic and abiotic stress, appears to be of utmost importance to achieve the transition to sustainable food systems called for in the Farm to Fork Strategy³⁶, agriculture, horticulture, environmental protection, climate change mitigation and adaptation, food and feed security, and the economy in general.

(32) Certain types of varieties do not fulfil the established requirements concerning distinctness, uniformity and stability. However, they are important for the conservation and sustainable use of plant genetic resources. They are traditionally grown or new locally produced varieties under specific local conditions and adapted to those conditions. They are characterised, in particular, by reduced uniformity due to a high level of genetic and phenotypical diversity between individual reproductive units. Those varieties are referred to as ‘conservation varieties’. The production and marketing of those varieties contribute to the objectives of the International Treaty on Plant Genetic Resources for Food and Agriculture to promote the conservation and sustainable use of plant genetic resources for food and agriculture ⁽⁴⁰⁾. As a party to the Treaty the Union has committed to support those objectives.

(32) Certain types of varieties do not fulfil the established requirements concerning distinctness, uniformity and stability. However, they are important for the conservation and sustainable use of plant genetic resources, which are crucial for crop genetic diversity and essential for adaptation to environmental changes and future needs. They are traditionally grown or new locally produced varieties under specific local conditions and adapted to those conditions. They are characterised, in particular, by reduced uniformity due to a satisfactory level of genetic and phenotypical diversity between individual reproductive units. Those varieties are referred to as ‘conservation varieties’. It is appropriate to acknowledge that the conservation of genetic resources is a dynamic process and that newly bred varieties adapted to local conditions should be included. The production and marketing of those varieties contribute to the objectives of the International Treaty on Plant Genetic Resources for Food and Agriculture to promote the conservation and sustainable use of plant genetic resources for food and agriculture ⁽⁴⁰⁾. As a party to the Treaty the Union has committed to support those objectives.

(38) The use of PRM that does not belong to a variety pursuant to this Regulation, but rather belongs to a plant grouping within a single botanical taxon, with a high level of genetic and phenotypic diversity between individual reproductive units ('heterogeneous material'), could have benefits especially in organic production and low input agriculture, through improving resilience and increasing the within-species genetic diversity of cultivated plants. Therefore, PRM of heterogeneous material should be allowed to be produced and marketed without having to comply with the requirements for variety registration and the other production and marketing requirements of this Regulation. Specific requirements for the production and marketing of that material should be set out.

If such cultivation is not done under appropriate conditions, it may lead to development of weeds resistant to those herbicides, spread of such resistance genes in the environment or to the need to increase of quantities of herbicides applied. (a) species and, as applicable, variety to which the selected clone or polyclonal PRM belongs, whereby the variety shall be registered in a national variety register referred to in Article 44;

(b) proposed denomination and synonyms;

(c) where applicable, description of the polyclonal PRM;

(d) the maintainer of the selected clone or polyclonal PRM;

(e) reference to the description of the main characteristics of the variety to which the selected clone or polyclonal PRM belongs;

(f) description of the main value for sustainable cultivation and use characteristics of the selected clone or polyclonal PRM;

(g) the estimated genetic gains of the selected clone or polyclonal PRM in relation to the overall performance of the relevant variety;

(h) information on whether the selected clone or polyclonal PRM is already registered in a register of another Member State.

2. The selected clone shall fulfil the following requirements in order to be registered in the Member State's register:

(a) it shall be selected within the variety it belongs to for some special intravarietal phenotypic traits and its phytosanitary status that give the selected clone a better performance, in accordance with internationally accepted methods based on methods from the International Organisation of Vine and

Wine;

(b) the trueness of the selected clone to the identity of the variety shall be ensured through the observation of the phenotypic characteristics and, where appropriate, through molecular analysis pursuant to internationally accepted standards.

3. The polyclonal PRM shall fulfil the following requirements in order to be registered in the Member State's register:

(a) it shall be selected in a single field trial containing a representative sample of the overall genetic diversity of the variety according to an experimental design based on internationally accepted methods; that design shall be based on methods prescribed by the International Organisation of Vine and Wine and shall be composed of seven to 20 distinct genotypes^{1a};

(b) the trueness of the polyclonal PRM to the identity of the variety shall be ensured through the observation of the phenotypic characteristics and, where appropriate, through molecular analysis pursuant to internationally accepted standards.

4. The competent authority shall decide on the registration in the Member State's register only after it concludes that the conditions set out in paragraphs 2 and 3, as applicable for the type of material, are fulfilled.
