ABSTRACT

The justice system of the Netherlands continues to enjoy a high level of perceived judicial independence. The procedure for appointing members of the Council for the Judiciary and court management boards is currently being reviewed by the Government. The debate on the removal of the executive's power to give instructions to prosecutors in individual cases continues. Strengthened security measures to enhance the resilience of the justice system against organised crime are under consideration and proposals were announced to address the Council of State's concerns regarding compliance with lawyer-client confidentiality. Specific recommendations to address staff shortages and workload concerns among the judiciary are being discussed. Initiatives to enhance access to justice continue, while concerns expressed as regards the available funding for legal aid led to calls for a more stable budget. The level of digitalisation has further improved and a legal framework for the publication of judgments is under preparation. The efficiency of the justice system continues to be high.

The Government continues to reflect on a strengthened anti-corruption policy framework. Preventing the infiltration of organised crime in public institutions through corruption continues to be a strategic priority. The integrity framework for the police is being strengthened. The investigation and prosecution of corruption cases continue to be handled effectively. Work on improving the enforcement of foreign bribery cases is being carried out, including by introducing guidelines on self-monitoring and self-reporting. The Government adopted the reform of the rules on revolving doors and forwarded it to Parliament. Some steps have been taken as regards transparency of lobbying, with further evaluation of the existing measures. The draft Political Parties Act aims to streamline existing legislation, increase transparency and limit foreign and anti-democratic influence. A National Risk Assessment aims to identify the largest corruption threats and overall risks at national, provincial, and local levels.

While the Dutch media regulator maintains its operational independence, supported by adequate resources, some issues have been raised related to the adequacy of the self-governing body for the press sector. Challenges continue regarding transparency of media ownership and high-level media market concentration. There are ongoing efforts to reform the public broadcasting system, while concerns have been raised over accountability and the ability to uphold journalistic standards. The Government continues efforts to improve transparency and access to information in response to ongoing challenges in the implementation of the Open Government Act. Despite several ongoing efforts to improve the safety of journalists, threats and violence remain concerning.

Some further steps have been taken by all state powers to address the shortcomings resulting in the childcare allowances affair, and recommendations by a State Commission on the Rule of Law to strengthen the legal protection of citizens were presented. The Netherlands Institute for Human Rights continues to face governance issues. The landscape for civil society organisations remains open, while some reported shortcomings regarding restrictions to the right to demonstrate remain.

RECOMMENDATIONS

Overall, concerning the recommendations in the 2023 Rule of Law Report, the Netherlands has made:

- Some further progress on efforts to improve the level of digitalisation of the justice system, in particular as regards the publication of judgments.
- Some further progress on completing the revision of rules on revolving doors involving former ministers and state secretaries, including a two-year cooling-off period and restrictions on paid activities.
- Some progress on establishing stricter transparency rules on lobbying for members of the Government and Parliament.
- Some further progress on a comprehensive follow-up to the childcare allowances affair, involving all relevant state authorities, building also on the work of the State Commission on the Rule of Law.

On this basis, and considering other developments that took place in the period of reference, it is recommended to the Netherlands to:

- Continue efforts to address shortages in human resources and challenging working conditions in the justice system.
- Complete the revision of rules on revolving doors involving former ministers and state secretaries, including a two-year cooling-off period and restrictions on paid activities.
- Establish stricter transparency rules on lobbying for members of the Government and Parliament.
- Enhance the governance of public service media and its ability to uphold journalistic standards, taking into account European standards on public service media.
- Ensure an adequate follow-up to the recommendations of the State Commission on the Rule of Law, strengthening the legal protection of citizens.

I. JUSTICE SYSTEM

The justice system is based on a court system composed of 11 district courts, 4 general courts of appeal, 2 specialised courts¹, the Administrative Jurisdiction Division of the Council of State² and a Supreme Court. An independent Council for the Judiciary plays a key role in safeguarding the independence of the judiciary and is tasked with fostering the quality of the judicial system, including allocating financial resources to courts³. Candidate judges are selected by the National Selection Committee for Judges⁴ and subsequently appointed for life by the executive⁵ on the proposal of the Minister of Justice and Security⁶. The prosecution service is separate from the Ministry of Justice and Security, but falls under the political responsibility of the Minister for Justice. The Netherlands Bar is established by law. It is independent from the Government and financed exclusively through lawyers' annual contributions⁷. The Netherlands participates in the European Public Prosecutor's Office (EPPO).

Independence

The level of perceived judicial independence in the Netherlands continues to be high among both the general public and companies. Overall, 70% of the general population and 74% of companies perceive the level of independence of courts and judges to be 'fairly or very good' in 2024⁸. Among the general public, this figure remains at the same level as in 2023 (70%) but is lower in comparison with 2020 (77%). The perceived judicial independence among companies has increased in comparison with 2023 (72%), although it remains lower in comparison with 2020 (81%)⁹.

² The Council of State also has an advisory branch, which renders opinions on draft legislation. State councillors in the Administrative Jurisdiction Division of the Council of State are appointed for life by Royal Decree upon the nomination by the Minister of the Interior and Kingdom Relations, in consultation with the Minister of Justice and Security, and recommendation by the Council itself, after a selection process conducted by the Administrative Jurisdiction Division.

⁶ This procedure applies to candidate judges for the eleven district courts, the four general courts of appeal and the two specialised courts. Law on the Legal Status of the Judiciary. The Council for the Judiciary has delegated this to the National Selection Committee for Judges. The Minister of Justice and Security has in all cases followed the recommendation by the Council for the Judiciary.

⁸ Figures 51, and 53, 2024 EU Justice Scoreboard and Figures 50 and 52, 2022 EU Justice Scoreboard. The level of perceived judicial independence is categorised as follows: very low (below 30% of respondents perceive judicial independence as fairly good and very good); low (between 30-39%), average (between 40-59%), high (between 60-75%), very high (above 75%).

Additional measures to strengthen judicial independence are being discussed. A legislative proposal prohibiting the simultaneous holding of the office of judge and membership of Parliament is still pending in the House of Representatives¹⁰. As reported last year, following the advice of the Council of State, the Government abandoned a legislative proposal to lessen the House of Representatives' role in the appointment procedure of Supreme Court judges¹¹. A motion was however put forward in Parliament on 10 April 2024 calling on the Government to ensure that the process by which the House of Representatives designates Supreme Court judges is carried out in a more transparent manner¹². As regards administrative justice, the situation in which some Council of State councillors combine both advisory and judiciary functions is de facto phasing out and is intended to be terminated by the end of 2024¹³. Following the conclusions of a Parliamentary Inquiry into Fraud Policy¹⁴, the coalition agreement between members of the new Government¹⁵ sets out the intention to separate the Administrative Jurisdiction Division from the Council of State and transfer it to the judiciary.

¹⁰ The legislative proposal has been discussed in the House of Representatives on 10 April 2024. The outcome of those discussions is still pending. Netherlands Government, Bill 36243- Amendment of various laws in the interest of honest, independent and impartial judiciary, 8 November 2022. See also 2023 Rule of Law Report Country Chapter on the rule of law situation in the Netherlands, p. 3.

¹¹ 2023 Rule of Law Report, Country Chapter on the rule of law situation in the Netherlands, p. 4. Currently, a Committee of Supreme Court judges draws up a list of six candidates and submits it to the House of Representatives, which selects and ranks three candidates and invites the first-ranked person for an interview. The selected candidate is then nominated by the Minister of Justice and Security for appointment by the executive by Royal Decree. The Government proposal would have abolished the nomination right of the House of Representatives. Instead, a committee, consisting of one member appointed by the House and one member appointed by the Supreme Court, would have been given this right.

¹³ The Council of State has two primary tasks, carried out by two separate divisions. The Advisory Division advises the Government and Parliament on legislation and governance, while the Administrative Jurisdiction Division is the country's highest general administrative court. A previous proposal to split the judicial and advisory branches of the Council of State was withdrawn by the Government in 2016. The Venice Commission welcomed steps taken to better separate the advisory function from the judicial function and expressed the view that the legislator could consider removing the possibility of a double mandate or separating the divisions institutionnaly: Venice Commission, CDL-AD(2023)029, para. 31 and para. 32

¹⁴ The Parliamentary Report notes that there are four highest courts in the field of administrative law, each with their own expertise. It submits that the fragmentation among so many different courts entails a risk in terms of legal unity and legal certainty. It criticises the fact that the Advisory Division of the Council of State is involved in advising the legislator on (draft) bills, while these laws are at a later stage assessed by the Administrative Jurisdiction Division of the same Council of State; Report of Parliamentary Commission of Inquiry into Fraud Policy and Services, Blind to Man and Law, 26 February 2024, p. 70. In academia it has been suggested that the appointment procedure of the Administrative Jurisdiction Division of the Council of State could be further aligned to that of the Supreme Court to enhance judicial independence; see P. Bovend'Eert, Strengthening the Rule of Law. Better safeguards for judicial independence, Reflections on a Venice Commission report, Nederlands Juristenblad, 2024/4, pp. 240-249.

The procedure for appointing members of the Council for the Judiciary and court management boards is currently being reviewed by the Government. On 12 March 2024 a motion was adopted in Parliament calling for legislation to minimise the Minister of Justice and Security's role in the appointment of members of the Council for the Judiciary¹⁶. The Venice Commission also recommended to circumscribe the Minister of Justice and Security's power in respect of the appointment procedure of candidates for court management boards¹⁷. It pointed out that, given that the Minister of Justice and Security, the Council for the Judiciary, and court management boards work together in determining financial allocations for the judiciary, circumscribing the Minister's role would also increase guarantees against external pressure on the decisions on budgetary matters¹⁸. Stakeholders note that since the Minister of Justice and Security appoints members of the Council for the Judiciary, the appointment of court administrators and the appointment and promotion of judges may be susceptible to political influence¹⁹. A temporary procedure for the appointment of members of court management boards where the role of judges and court staff was increased, is expected to become permanent following a positive evaluation²⁰. As regards disciplinary measures against members of the Council for the Judiciary and court management boards²¹, the Venice Commission recommended that the ground of "unsuitability", based on which members may be dismissed, should be defined in a more concrete and precise manner²². The Council for the Judiciary endorsed this recommendation²³.

The debate on the removal of the executive's power to give instructions to prosecutors in individual cases continues. Draft legislation initiated by Parliament aiming at abolishing the power of the Minister of Justice and Security to instruct the prosecution service in an individual case remains pending, following a negative opinion from the Council of State²⁴. In

¹⁹ The Council for the Judiciary called for further limiting the role of the executive in all judicial appointments. this regard the Venice Commission²⁵, while acknowledging the importance of the existing culture of self-restraint in the Netherlands, nonetheless considered that ‘the safeguards embedded in the law, in particular as regards the instructions not to prosecute, may not be strong enough in the event of a majority of a Government in Parliament that frees itself from these rules of self-limitation’²⁶. Against this background, it recommended removing the Minister’s power to give instructions not to prosecute in specific cases, or at least limiting this prerogative to clearly defined exceptional circumstances²⁷. Stakeholders also called for a reconsideration of the power of the Minister of Justice and Security to instruct the prosecution service²⁸.

Strengthened security measures to enhance the resilience of the justice system against organised crime are under consideration and proposals were announced to address the Council of State’s concerns regarding compliance with lawyer-client confidentiality. The 2023 Rule of Law Report reported on reforms following failures in ensuring the safety of key witnesses as well as of their relatives and their advisors in criminal proceedings. Attempts by organised crime to infiltrate the judiciary or intimidate its members are seen as a conceivable threat²⁹. Lawyers are also more hesitant to defend key witnesses and those suspected of participation in a criminal organisation³⁰. The Government has started to fundamentally review the monitoring and security system for persons who are threatened, under the direction of the National Coordinator for Counterterrorism and Security³¹. It also intends to amend the key witness scheme in such a way to cover more suspects that are charged with criminal offences of a less serious nature, as well as to clarify the obligations of the State and of Representatives, 2021-2022 session, 36 125, no 2 The Bill is still awaiting plenary debate in Parliament. The prosecution service itself did not see the need for amending legislation, since the Minister has not used this power in practice and -in its opinion- the law on judicial organisation contains adequate accompanying guarantees.

²⁹ Written contribution from the Government and the Council for the Judiciary in the context of the country visit to the Netherlands; The Dutch Judiciary Association conducted a survey among its members at the end of September 2023, which received 370 responses. Many judges and prosecutors said they feel less safe in recent years due to threats from the criminal environment. Some judges and prosecutors prefer not to do certain cases due to insecurity concerns.

of key witnesses, respectively³². Based on the conclusions of an external study³³, the Bar Association considers that the key witness scheme should not be expanded until the safety of all persons concerned, including lawyers, is guaranteed³⁴. Also, the Government has proposed to introduce visual supervision of lawyer-client conversations in high-security prisons and to limit the number of lawyers that may meet with these clients to two³⁵. A proposed Parliamentary amendment that would also allow for auditory monitoring³⁶ was submitted to the Council of State, which concluded that the amendment was incompatible with the constitution, European Union law and European standards³⁷. The Bar Association, which itself has put in place a specific taskforce developing initiatives to protect lawyers against criminal subversion³⁸, considers that the proposed limitations would be disproportionate and incompatible with lawyer-client confidentiality³⁹. On 24 May 2024, the former Government announced a revised legislative proposal which will exclude auditory monitoring⁴⁰. This is yet to be confirmed by the new Government.

Quality

Some further progress has been made to improve digitalisation and a legal framework for the publication of judgments is under preparation. The 2023 Rule of Law Report recommended to the Netherlands to ‘continue efforts to improve the level of digitalisation of the justice system, in particular as regards the publication of judgments⁴¹. According to the 2024 EU Justice Scoreboard, digitalisation of justice is overall advanced⁴². Legislation is being prepared for the conduct of online hearings⁴³. Moreover, several pilot projects have further improved the level of digitalisation of the justice system⁴⁴. The Digital Access Project is being implemented in all jurisdictions, to enable people to initiate and follow proceedings online⁴⁵, while some room for improvement remains for civil and administrative cases⁴⁶. The availability of electronic communication tools in courts continues to be high⁴⁷. At the level of the highest courts, all judgments are being published and with the ongoing deployment of the “More and Responsible Publishing Programme”, more judgments have been published online for other courts too, though the overall publication rate remains low⁴⁸. At the same time, the Government points to the need to ensure the protection of personal data when publishing judgments⁴⁹. In this regard, a legislative proposal for the publication of judgments is under preparation⁵⁰. Overall, there has been some further progress on the recommendation made in the 2023 Report.

Specific recommendations to address staff shortages and workload concerns among the judiciary are being discussed. The 2023 Rule of Law Report reported concerns expressed by judges and public prosecutors regarding staff shortages and challenging working conditions due to a high workload⁵¹. On 23 April 2024, an independent expert presented a report to the Minister for Legal Protection and the Dutch Judiciary Association with recommendations on how to reduce the workload⁵². The aim is to work on concrete adjustments based on this report (e.g., as regards the financial compensation for structurally excessive overtime, reducing the administrative burden on trainers, allowing experienced legal experts to perform the function of deputy judge⁵³ and a better deployment and more attractive career paths for court lawyers)⁵⁴. The Council for the Judiciary underlines that high-quality justice is required in a well-functioning democracy based on the rule of law. It emphasises that the judiciary is a core function of the state requiring a robust and stable budget. At present the judiciary has to compete with other policy goals of the Ministry of Security and Justice and therefore funding the judiciary becomes a political choice. The judiciary is a core function of the state and needs an appropriate independent funding⁵⁵. According to the 2024 EU Justice Scoreboard, the expenditure on the justice system has been decreasing, in relative terms, in recent years⁵⁶.

Initiatives to enhance access to justice continue, while concerns expressed as regards the available funding for legal aid led to calls for a more stable budget. Concerns expressed over the last years as regards the available funding for the legal aid system persist⁵⁷. A one-off compensation for legal aid providers in the funded legal aid system was announced in November 2023 in view of the high inflation⁵⁸. In 2023, the number of active legal aid lawyers slightly decreased⁵⁹. Stakeholders noted a lack of attractiveness due to low fees and the difficulty of training new legal aid professionals⁶⁰. In response, the Government announced a review of the financial compensation of legal aid professionals with a possible recalibration of the funded legal aid system as of 2025⁶¹. At the same time, the Bar association calls for a budget for the system of funded legal aid, which would ensure its stability over time⁶². Concerning court fees, the 2023 Rule of Law Report reported on the Government's plan to reduce them by 25%⁶³. Despite the Council of State approving the proposal in April 2023, the Government did not table it due to subsequent budget cuts.

⁵⁸ One-off compensation measure amounting to EUR 26 million. The amount to be received by legal aid providers is determined based on the number of granted legal aid assignments, emergency duty reports, and additional hours allocated between 1 October 2022 and 1 October 2023. This calculation considers a rate of 4.62 percent, which represents the difference between the indexing rates as of 1 January 2023 (0.67%) and 1 January 2024 (5.29%); Contribution from the Bar association for the 2024 Rule of Law Report, p. 5.

⁶² The budget system in the Netherlands is organised in such a way that amounts cannot be determined in advance. In the case of funded legal aid, this means that a political discussion must always take place about the amount to be allocated to the scheme, taking into account the necessity to increase fees. The Netherlands Bar would prefer a system by which fee adjustments are automatically applied, without the need for a discussion; Contribution from the Bar association for the 2024 Rule of Law Report, p. 5.

⁶³ 2023 Rule of Law Report, Country Chapter on the rule of law situation in the Netherlands, p. 8.

Instead, a reform impacting court fees in administrative law was proposed which would allow to waive court fees in administrative law cases for litigants who are unable to pay them⁶⁴. In December 2023, the Government also announced that court fees would not be indexed for 2023 and would be indexed with a smaller percentage in 2024⁶⁵. These measures should lead to an overall reduction of around 13.5% of court fees⁶⁶.

Efficiency

The efficiency of the justice system continues to be high. The duration of proceedings for first instance civil, commercial, administrative, and other cases remains short⁶⁷, and the clearance rate is effective. However, in comparison to 2021, a slight increase in the duration of proceedings and decrease in the clearance rates can be noted in 2022⁶⁸. This trend is confirmed by the rate of resolving administrative cases at first instance, which decreased to 99 % in 2022⁶⁹. The processing time for such cases has, however, decreased⁷⁰. As regards cases related to money laundering⁷¹ and bribery⁷², the 2024 EU Justice Scoreboard shows an increase in the average length of court cases in 2022, in comparison to the previous year. Data on the efficiency of litigious civil and commercial cases is still lacking, which does not permit to fully evaluate the efficiency of the justice system. The Council for the Judiciary also reports that shortage of judicial staff, linked to the difficult working conditions within the judiciary as explained above, is expected to affect the proportion of cases handled within the standard processing time in the coming years⁷³. The backlog of criminal cases resulting from the COVID-19 pandemic continued to decrease at first and second instance courts⁷⁴.

II. ANTI-CORRUPTION FRAMEWORK

Anti-corruption policy falls under the shared responsibility of the Ministry of Interior and Kingdom Relations (for promoting integrity) and of the Ministry of Justice and Security (for combatting corruption). Some of the competent authorities to investigate and prosecute corruption are the National Internal Investigations Department⁷⁵ (NIID) (focusing on investigation of bribery of public officials), the Fiscal Intelligence and Investigation Service (FIOD) (responsible for the investigation of financial crimes, including foreign and commercial bribery) with its Anti-Corruption Centre (ACC), the National Public Prosecution Service (focusing on the prosecution of bribery of public officials), and the Prosecution Service for Serious Fraud, Environmental Crime and Asset Confiscation (responsible for the prosecution of commercial and foreign bribery). The National Cooperation against Subversive Crime (NSOC) (a cooperation between executive bodies⁷⁶ tackling financial flows and business structures of subversive organised crime) remained in place this year. Responsibility for the prevention of corruption is spread out among many different actors⁷⁷. There is no overall anti-corruption agency responsible for the repression and/or prevention of corruption. Cooperation between anti-corruption and intelligence teams within law enforcement bodies continues.

⁶⁶ The Council for the Judiciary is disappointed that the proposal to reduce court fees by 25% will not be tabled as this reduction could have significantly increased access to justice; Information received in the context of the country visit to the Netherlands from the Council for the Judiciary. The Netherlands Bar advocates for further measures to be taken to reduce court fees, although this is seen as a first step in the right direction.

The perception among experts and business executives is that the level of corruption in the Netherlands public sector remains relatively low. In the 2023 Corruption Perception Index by Transparency International, the Netherlands scores 79/100 and ranks 4th in the European Union and 8th globally⁷⁸. This perception has been relatively stable⁷⁹ over the past five years. The 2024 Special Eurobarometer on Corruption shows that 54% of respondents consider corruption widespread in their country (EU average 68%) and 5% of respondents feel personally affected by corruption in their daily lives (EU average: 27%)⁸⁰. As regards businesses, 53% of companies consider that corruption is widespread (EU average 65%) and 13% consider that corruption is a problem when doing business (EU average 36%)⁸¹. Furthermore, 46% of respondents find that there are enough successful prosecutions to deter people from corrupt practices (EU average 32%)⁸², while 45% of companies believe that people and businesses caught for bribing a senior official are appropriately punished (EU average 31%)⁸³.

The Government has continued consultations with public bodies and civil society on strengthening the anti-corruption policy. As reported last year, the Netherlands lacks an overall anti-corruption strategy⁸⁴. The Ministry of Justice and Security continues to consult public bodies and civil society organisations on how to further strengthen the anti-corruption policy⁸⁵. Consultations are currently focussing on existing anti-corruption legislation and policy, and their implementation⁸⁶. Civil society organisations also reiterated their call for strengthening the existing legal framework to address the lack of adequate criminalisation of trading in influence⁸⁷. The Government has commissioned a total of four risk assessments related to corruption⁸⁸. While these risk assessments cover different areas, and have different goals and methodologies, these assessments do not appear tied together in an overall anti-corruption strategic approach⁸⁹. Additionally, legislation for the prosecution and trial of ministers and Members of Parliament is being updated⁹⁰. In its May 2024 coalition agreement, the new Government committed to implement a country-wide approach on combatting corruption by increasing the resilience of civil servants and their willingness to report abuses and by raising awareness on the risks of unauthorised access to IT systems by public officials⁹¹. Civil society welcomed this explicit commitment to fight corruption but noted that plans remain abstract⁹². The new government also pledged to take account of GRECO recommendations, as part of a broader agenda on democracy, rule of law and good governance⁹³.

The level of perceived corruption is categorised as follows: low (the perception among experts and business executives of public sector corruption scores above 79); relatively low (scores between 79-60), relatively high (scores between 59-50), high (scores below 50).

⁷⁹ In 2018, the score was 82 while in 2023, the score is 79. The score significantly increases/decreases when it changes more than five points; improves/deteriorates when it changes between 4-5 points; is relatively stable when it changes from 1-3 points in the last five years.

Preventing infiltration of organised crime groups in the civil service and police through corruption continues to be a strategic priority. Corruption is largely considered to be linked to the interests of subversive organised crime⁹⁴. A programme on combating subversive organised crime was launched in 2020 and continues to be developed⁹⁵. Research on corruption risks and resilience at the Port of Rotterdam and Schiphol Airport, which is part of the action plan on mainports⁹⁶, was published in March 2024⁹⁷. The NIID has investigated 16 cases of information leakage and 18 cases of corruption within the authorities in 2023⁹⁸. Unauthorised access to databases, and the need for appropriate data logging⁹⁹ continue to be high-profile issues linked to infiltration. The NIID and the Public Prosecution Service have issued four reports in 2023 relating to the issuance of data-secure identification documents as well as to logging and access management in governmental information systems¹⁰⁰. As a result, local authorities have been working to address vulnerabilities in their work processes¹⁰¹. Research on aspects of Italy's anti-mafia approach¹⁰² pointed to best practices which are also relevant to the Dutch context and on which the Netherlands are already working to fight organised crime¹⁰³. The Ministerial Committee on Tackling Subversive Crime initiated a risk assessment¹⁰⁴ which aims at gaining insight into the current approach on tackling corruption in the different public bodies, examining corruption risks and at raising awareness for the importance of anti-corruption measures¹⁰⁵. First results on this specific assessment, concerning risks in the ministries, will be available by summer 2024 with results on executive agencies and local governments following later¹⁰⁶.

The investigation and prosecution of corruption-related crimes remains effective and the competent authorities continue their work focusing on corruption linked to ⁹⁷ The research concludes that their main corruption risk is bribery in the law enforcement chain and that in both Rotterdam and Schiphol, employee resilience against bribery in the law enforcement chain is the highest compared to all other risks represented. organised crime. The investigation and prosecution of corruption-related offences continue to function properly, including in high-level cases, with no immediate obstacles signalled by the investigators and prosecutors¹⁰⁷. Statistics concerning the number of investigations on corruption-related crimes are not available, but in 2023, 44 individuals were indicted by the prosecution on charges of corruption¹⁰⁸ (compared to 48 individuals in 2022)¹⁰⁹. Additionally, in 2023, courts imposed final convictions¹¹⁰ in six cases¹¹¹ in first instance and in 15 cases¹¹² in second instance in which breaches of one or several corruption-related crimes have been proven¹¹³. This resulted in 67 sanctions in 2023, whereas in 2022, 103 sanctions were imposed¹¹⁴. The EPPO has signalled no corruption cases among its open cases in 2023 in the Netherlands¹¹⁵. The National Cooperation against Subversive Crime (NSOC) - established in 2022 as a cooperation between executive bodies tackling criminal financial flows and their underlying business structures, including money laundering and corruption¹¹⁶ - initially continued its work following an evaluation, with a focus on information sharing¹¹⁷. Following a motion adopted by the Dutch Parliament on 25 June 2024, the Government committed to accelerate the dismantling of NSOC and allocate financial means to the competent authorities to organise this information-sharing themselves¹¹⁸. Transparency International had previously criticised the NSOC's unclear legal mandate¹¹⁹.

Work on improving the enforcement of foreign bribery cases continues, including by introducing guidelines on self-monitoring and self-reporting. foreign bribery cases¹²². Overall efforts to increase the capacity of the prosecution service¹²³ should also have an effect in the area of foreign bribery. Following a study on self-reporting, cooperation with the investigators and self-investigation from 2023¹²⁴, the prosecution service is drafting guidelines for self-monitoring and self-reporting of financial economic crimes (including foreign bribery cases and others) to provide clarity for companies¹²⁵. Further legislation on this topic is not expected¹²⁶. A judgment of the Supreme Court has clarified the legal safeguards as regards prosecutorial requests on large data sets potentially covering protected communications, providing for an increased role for the examining magistrate¹²⁷. This could mitigate the impact of the issue of large datasets on some foreign bribery investigations¹²⁸.

Police and law enforcement agencies continue to make extensive efforts to promote integrity and combat corruption risks. Work on police integrity continues and recorded significant achievements last year¹²⁹. The police appointed a Director on Integrity in November 2023, responsible for a strategic policy promoting integrity and an ethical working environment¹³⁰ and established a dedicated unit designed to combat corruption internally¹³¹. Moreover, further analysis on corruption risks within the police is ongoing through research projects aimed at identifying corruption risks and strategies to be able to fight corruption within law enforcement agencies early on¹³². The police is currently revising its 2014 policy on accepting gifts and networking¹³³. While taking the implementation of an obligatory gift-registry system recommended by GRECO under consideration¹³⁴, the police doubts such a system would be effective as police officers are already required not to accept gifts exceeding a value of €50¹³⁵.

Integrity and transparency for ministers and state secretaries continues to be promoted although largely based on self-responsibility. A Code of Conduct for Ministers and State Secretaries including rules on gifts, secondary activities and lobbying was adopted in December 2022¹³⁶. Two high-level integrity advisers¹³⁷ were appointed in March 2024¹³⁸. They will function as advisory focal points in cases of integrity concerns and suspicions on the side of ministries and state secretaries. However, seeking their advice is neither compulsory, nor is their advice binding, and the advisers do not have sanctioning powers and cannot forward any report to the Government or Parliament¹³⁹. According to the Code, ministers must themselves report any acceptance of financial interests to the House of Representatives, but an oversight mechanism has not been put in place¹⁴⁰. Hence, the enforcement of the Code of Conduct is based on self-responsibility and on the principle of parliamentary trust¹⁴¹, which stakeholders continue to be skeptical about.¹⁴² Moreover, the Minister of Interior and Kingdom Relations recently addressed the subject of integrity in the Council of Ministers. After the forming of a new government and before it will take office, an extensive session to raise awareness on integrity issues will be carried out by an external supervisor for the new ministers and state secretaries¹⁴³. Finally, the overall integrity policy for civil servants and politicians, adopted in 2023, remains in place¹⁴⁴.

Several Members of Parliament were suspended for breaching the integrity rules, while broader issues with the asset and interest disclosure regime are signalled. In December 2023, the College of Investigation of Integrity¹⁴⁵ advised the House of Representatives for the second time to issue suspensions of several Members of Parliament for a breach of transparency rules¹⁴⁶. In 2023, following the College's advice, three parliamentarians were suspended for one week following their refusal to declare their assets and interests in a food delivery service¹⁴⁷. Transparency International is concerned that the 2022 sanctions did not have a dissuasive effect, citing concerns about their length and severity¹⁴⁸. On the basis of research of journalists¹⁴⁹, Transparency International filed a complaint to GRECO alleging that over one third of parliamentarians do not or only insufficiently declare their side jobs and interests¹⁵⁰ and that there is an insufficient review of these declarations¹⁵¹. In view of Transparency International, this is in contrast to the GRECO recommendation from 2013, which served as a basis for these transparency rules¹⁵². Stakeholders criticise existing Parliament guidelines as overly vague and too open for interpretation by the relevant House integrity working group¹⁵³.

There has been some further progress on the legislative reform on rules on revolving doors as it was adopted by the Government, after taking into account advice from the Council of State. The 2023 Rule of Law Report recommended to the Netherlands to 'complete the revision of rules on revolving doors involving former ministers and state secretaries, including a two-year cooling-off period and restrictions in paid activities'¹⁵⁴. The Government transmitted its legislative proposal on this matter to the Council of State in July 2023¹⁵⁵ and received its advice in February 2024¹⁵⁶. As reported last year, the proposed system would nearly entirely rely on self-responsibility¹⁵⁷ as it does not provide for oversight or sanctioning mechanisms, and it does not require mandatory follow up to the advice received¹⁵⁸. The Council of State welcomed a reform of the rules of revolving doors. It however emphasised that legislation should be embedded into a broader integrity policy to promote a culture of integrity within the public service, reiterating also its customary warning about addressing ethical issues solely through legislation¹⁵⁹. To address the lack of binding character of the advice by the Advisory Board, it suggested that the Prime Minister recommends to the (former) minister or state secretary concerned to follow the Advisory Board's advice¹⁶⁰. At the end of April 2024, after taking into account the Council of State's advice, the Government adopted the bill and passed it on to the House of Representatives for approval¹⁶¹. The Open State Foundation welcomed the progress on rules on revolving doors¹⁶². Since the proposal has been adopted by the Government and sent to Parliament, there has been some further progress on the implementation of the recommendation made in the 2023 Rule of Law Report.

There has been some progress as regards transparency of lobbying, with further evaluation of the existing measures ongoing. The 2023 Rule of Law Report recommended the Netherlands to 'establish stricter transparency rules on lobbying for members of the Government and Parliament'¹⁶³. As already reported last year, there is no transparency register for ministers and state secretaries¹⁶⁴, and since then, no updates were noted as regards the transparency of lobbying in Parliament¹⁶⁵. Following a 2022 study on how transparency in the government could be promoted¹⁶⁶, only the existing integrity policy – which includes the publishing of legislative footprints¹⁶⁷ and ministerial agendas¹⁶⁸ – has been updated¹⁶⁹. The Government believes that the existing measures already meet the objective of a transparency register, namely providing insight into contacts with third parties and influence in political decision making.¹⁷⁰ It remains the individual responsibility of each Minister and State Secretary to disclose their agendas and legislative footprints¹⁷¹. The Government has nevertheless commissioned additional research to further evaluate the effects of the measures in place, and, in case there would be a decision to update the lobbying regulation in the future, the responsible Ministry pre-emptively launched a comparative study on lobbying registers in place in other EU Member States¹⁷². Transparency International criticised the rules for not being sufficiently transparent and recommended the introduction of a compulsory transparency register, an independent oversight authority and a code of ethics for lobbyists¹⁷³. They also noted an uneven performance of various ministers in publishing their agendas¹⁷⁴ and the practical absence of a legislative footprint¹⁷⁵. Since the Government is evaluating the current system and looking into best practices in other Member States, there has been some progress on the implementation of the recommendation made in the 2023 Rule of Law Report.

No updates regarding this lobbying register were reported.

¹⁶⁶ This study concluded that instead of implementing a lobbying register, the Government should strengthen the rules on transparency already in place, namely the publishing of ministerial agendas and legislative footprints, see also the 2023 Rule of Law Report, Country Chapter on the rule of law situation in the Netherlands, p. 15 and Input from the Netherlands for the 2023 Rule of Law Report, p. 13.

The draft new Political Parties Act aims to streamline existing legislation, increase transparency and limit foreign and anti-democratic influence. Following the revision of the Act on Political Party Financing in 2023¹⁷⁶, the Government has published a separate and more comprehensive draft law on party financing and transparency: the Political Parties Act¹⁷⁷. It aims at combining and improving the Act on Political Party Financing¹⁷⁸. The Political Parties Act aims to regulate, amongst other provisions, foreign parties' activities and includes a prohibition on parties that "present a clear and present danger of undermining or abolishing the democratic rule of law"¹⁷⁹. It also proposes to subsidise parties at the local and provincial levels, aiming to make them independent from private investors and thus less susceptible to unwanted financial influence¹⁸⁰. The draft was sent to the Council of State for advice, following consensus among all ministries¹⁸¹. Transparency International has welcomed the reforms¹⁸².

The Whistleblower's Authority observes a substantial rise of reports and investigations following the adoption of relevant legislation. As reported last year, the new whistleblowing legislation entered into force in 2023 with the aim to transpose the EU Whistleblower Protection Directive¹⁸³. The government foresees further amendments to the legislation to regulate issues outside the scope of the Directive, but this awaits further research¹⁸⁴. Following the adoption of this legislation, the Whistleblower's Authority recorded a rise of 52% in requests for advice from potential reporters of suspected wrongdoing compared to 2022¹⁸⁵. However, specific data on the number of reports that relate to corruption in the working environment is not gathered and can therefore not be evaluated¹⁸⁶. Additionally, 56% more employers have approached the Whistleblower's Authority in 2023 compared to 2022¹⁸⁷ with questions on topics including the implementation of a proper internal reporting channel¹⁸⁸. The government has initiated a campaign on safe working and reporting climate to promote knowledge about the Whistleblowers Protection Act¹⁸⁹. Three years after the entry into force of the law, the government will carry out an evaluation of its impact¹⁹⁰.

A National Risk Assessment aims to identify the largest corruption threats and overall risks at national, provincial and local levels. The Flash Eurobarometer on Businesses' attitudes towards corruption in the EU shows that 16% of companies in the Netherlands (EU average 27%) think that corruption has prevented them from winning a public tender or a public procurement contract in the last three years¹⁹¹. Public procurement remains one of the main areas at high risk of corruption in the country¹⁹². While the country follows a decentralised approach in the fight against corruption, the Ministry of Justice and Security has commissioned a National Risk Assessment on Corruption which commenced in April 2024¹⁹³. The assessment aims to identify the largest corruption threats, the overall risk-level of these threats as well as potential resilience against corruption¹⁹⁴ in the public and private sectors at a local, provincial and national level¹⁹⁵. Results are expected in late 2025¹⁹⁶. Since in the last years the healthcare sector has proven to be another high-risk area for corruption, including through a corruption case at the country's largest cardiology department¹⁹⁷, the FIOD-ACC and prosecution have increased their efforts in this regard¹⁹⁸. A recent audit by the Court of Audit found that – while overall praising the effective organisation of procurement at a time of crisis - the government did not pay sufficient attention to potential conflicts of interest during vaccine procurement for the COVID-19 pandemic¹⁹⁹.

III. MEDIA PLURALISM AND MEDIA FREEDOM

Media freedom in the Netherlands is underpinned by constitutional and legislative protections²⁰⁰. These protections include constitutional safeguards for press freedom²⁰¹, an independent media regulator (Commissariaat voor de Media), alongside mechanisms that guarantee the independence of public service media in terms of governance and financial support. Access to public documents is ensured through the Open Government Act of May 2022. With initiatives such as PersVeilig, important initiatives have been established to improve the safety of journalists, demonstrating a commitment to combating physical violence, online harassment, and legal disputes against media professionals.

While the Dutch media regulator maintains its operational independence, supported by adequate resources, some issues have been raised related to the adequacy of the self-governing body for the press sector. The media regulator continues to function autonomously²⁰² and is well-equipped to fulfil its mandate²⁰³. It considers that its financial and staffing resources are sufficient to address its current needs²⁰⁴. The journalistic self-regulatory body (Raad voor de Journalistiek) monitors deontological standards in the press sector by handling complaints and assessing whether a journalist has exceeded the boundaries of journalistic ethics. It can issue opinions only and it cannot impose rectifications or sanctions²⁰⁵. Free press Unlimited reported that several media are no longer recognising the deontological body, arguing that it is unequipped to assess complex cases²⁰⁶.

Challenges continue regarding transparency of media ownership and high-level media market concentration. Although the Dutch media regulator issues the Mediamonitor, which provides public access to media ownership details, it lacks the competence to compel entities to disclose their ownership information²⁰⁷. The high level of media concentration reported in last year's Rule of Law report²⁰⁸, with the associated very high-risk assessment of media concentration by the Media Pluralism Monitor²⁰⁹, persists²¹⁰. In December 2023, DPG Media, a major Belgian media company, announced its intention to acquire RTL Nederland, the largest private broadcasting company in the Netherlands with 24,4% of market share²¹¹. Journalist associations have voiced concerns over the increasing level of concentration in the media market that would result from this acquisition²¹². The acquisition agreement is subject to approval by the Dutch Authority for Consumers and Markets (Autoriteit Consument & Markt)²¹³. The Dutch media regulator has already publicly expressed its willingness to support²¹⁴ the competition authorities in reviewing the acquisition's potential impact on media pluralism²¹⁵. The recent coalition agreement has pledged to provide the Authority for Consumers and Markets with additional tools to take account of diversity in the Dutch media landscape in competition assessment²¹⁶.

There are ongoing efforts to reform the public broadcasting system, while concerns have been raised over accountability and the ability to uphold journalistic standards. The Dutch public broadcasting system, which currently includes 13 broadcasters representing various societal groups, is coordinated by the Foundation for Public Broadcasting (NPO) that oversees the distribution of airtime and the funding of recognised public broadcasters. As highlighted in last year's Rule of Law report²¹⁷, in line with the objective to promote media pluralism, the Government established an advisory committee to evaluate the governance of the public broadcasting system and offer recommendations on improving the admission and accountability criteria for public broadcasters²¹⁸. Released in September 2023, the committee's final report identified shortcomings of the current system in promoting media plurality and suggested several reforms²¹⁹. Recent developments regarding Ongehoord Nederland (ON), a public broadcaster claiming to represent the concerns of Dutch citizens who feel underrepresented in mainstream media, highlight challenges faced by the public broadcasting system in upholding journalistic standards and providing a plurality of information and opinions to their audiences in an impartial manner²²⁰. In 2023, ON received a third sanction from the NPO, following the Ombudsman confirmation²²¹ that ON systematically breached journalistic standards, including for allegations of racism and discrimination. Although the NPO's Board requested the Ministry of Culture to revoke ON's temporary licence, the State Secretary for Culture considered that the observed lack of cooperation by ON did not reach a sufficient threshold to warrant such a withdrawal²²². In its response, the State Secretary has pleaded for explicitly requiring adherence to journalistic standards as a criterion for the recognition and continued participation of broadcasters in the public system²²³. Furthermore, the State Secretary has pledged to examine the question relating to the adherence to journalistic standards²²⁴ as a criterion for the recognition and continued participation of broadcasters in the public system and has announced that an external study would be commissioned for this purpose²²⁵. The NPO has also expressed concerns over securing sufficient funding to fulfil its public service mandate, especially considering the need to meet the higher standards on public service media introduced by the European Media Freedom Act²²⁶.

The Government continues efforts to improve transparency and access to information in response to ongoing challenges in the implementation of the Open Government Act. Since the implementation of the Open Government Act in May 2022, the Government has continued efforts towards enhancing transparency and public access to information²²⁷. Key initiatives include the proactive disclosure of policy notes in addition to parliamentary documents since September 2022 and the introduction of a central platform (Woo-index)²²⁸ that consolidates all mandatory disclosed documents, allowing for easier public access²²⁹. However, the Government recognises that challenges in the implementation of the Open Government Act persist, particularly concerning the timely processing of information requests²³⁰. It therefore launched a review of the implementation of the Act, which revealed both obstacles and best practices in the handling of document requests²³¹. Following the results of this review published in December 2023²³², on 21 June 2024 the Government outlined measures to ensure a better implementation of the Act, including the management of public information and the acceleration of request processing²³³. For instance, to better monitor the handling of document requests, the Government is developing a central dashboard that would cover all central Government entities²³⁴.

There are several ongoing efforts to improve the safety of journalists, including legislation criminalising doxing, however threats and violence against journalists remain concerning. The initiative *PersVeilig*²³⁵ continues to play a crucial role in enhancing the safety of journalists, addressing physical assaults, online harassment, and legal disputes²³⁶. Stakeholders generally consider that PersVeilig has been proactive in addressing violence against journalists, including through its focus on online harassment and the legal intimidation of journalists²³⁷. The initiative is currently being evaluated to inform the development of a sustainable financial framework from 2025 onwards²³⁸, reflecting a commitment by the Government to a long-term support mechanism for journalists. Despite these efforts, challenges remain²³⁹, as reflected by the four alerts lodged with the Council of Europe's Platform to promote the protection of journalism and safety of journalists since the 2023 Rule of Law report²⁴⁰. One of the new alerts concerns an attempted murder of a journalist²⁴¹. A study commissioned by the Ministry of Justice and Security in 2023 offers detailed insights into the prevailing conditions of violence and aggression against journalists²⁴². Other research shows that a significant number of journalists (82%) encounter various forms of intimidation, aggression, or threats because of their work²⁴³. In addition, female journalists seem particularly vulnerable to specific forms of aggression, such as online harassment²⁴⁴. In this regard, the entry into force in January 2024 of legislation criminalising doxing²⁴⁵ was highlighted by stakeholders as a key step in protecting journalists from online threats, especially considering the applicable aggravated circumstances when targeting journalists²⁴⁶. Although certain stakeholders do not consider strategic lawsuits against public participation (SLAPP) as a systemic issue in the Netherlands²⁴⁷, they raised some concerns over a civil defamation case by a business owner against Het Financiële Dagblad and its editor-in-chief concerning articles regarding investments in Iran, which the Dutch Journalists' Union urged to be recognised as a SLAPP and dismissed by the courts²⁴⁸.

IV. OTHER INSTITUTIONAL ISSUES RELATED TO CHECKS AND BALANCES

The Netherlands has a bicameral parliamentary democracy which provides for an ex-ante constitutional review of draft legislation²⁴⁹. The Parliament is composed of the House of Representatives and the Senate. Legislative proposals can originate from the Government and from members of the House of Representatives. The Council of State gives advisory opinions on draft legislation. Independent authorities and civil society play an important role in the checks and balances system. The Netherlands Institute for Human Rights, which functions as the national equality body, contributes to upholding fundamental rights.

Stakeholders are generally satisfied with the consultation process on draft legislations and policies. As a general practice, the Government involves stakeholders by means of internet consultations during the drafting process of legislation or policy documents²⁵⁰. Civil society organisations report that at times the consultation period is shorter than normal for Panel discussions are also organised at an early stage with SMEs, entrepreneurs, and their representatives, on legislative proposals that might affect them²⁵².

Some further progress has been made by all state powers to address shortcomings resulting in the childcare allowances affair and recommendations by a State Commission on the Rule of Law to strengthen the legal protection of citizens were presented. The 2023 Rule of Law Report recommended to the Netherlands to ‘further continue the comprehensive follow-up to the childcare allowances affair, involving all relevant state authorities, building also on the work of the State Commission on the Rule of Law’²⁵³. In April 2022, the Government announced several measures regarding the executive, legislative, and judicial branch in response to the recommendations made by the Venice Commission to enhance the legal protection of citizens in relation to the State, following the childcare allowances affair²⁵⁴. In this regard, the Government is still preparing amendments to the General Administrative Law to strengthen the rights of individuals²⁵⁵. It is also making efforts to improve the quality of legislation and is preparing legislation to enable judicial constitutional review of legislation²⁵⁶. From the side of the judiciary, a trend is observed of more attention being paid to the legal protection of citizens by courts in the handling of administrative cases²⁵⁷. Following the childcare allowance affair, the Council for the Judiciary also reflects on possible problematic legislation in its yearly report. Parliament

²⁵¹ Consultations normally last between six to eight weeks, but the time allocated is sometimes reduced, with one specific initiative in the area of counterterrorism only being open for consultation for five days; Joint contribution from the Netherlands Helsinki Committee, Free Press Unlimited, Transparency International Nederland and NJCM for the 2024 Rule of Law Report, p. 22.

²⁵⁶ Input from the Netherlands for the 2024 Rule of Law Report, p. 22. The coalition agreement between PVV, VVD, NSC and BBB intends to reform the Constitution to remove the prohibition contained in Article 120 of the Constitution and allow for judicial constitutional review, and to create a Constitutional Court. It also foresees to strengthen constitutional review by Parliament, including its role in ratifying international treaties.

²⁵⁷ The Council for the Judiciary points out that as a result of this development, the (first instance) administrative judges have turned from ‘reviewing judges’; into more ‘legal protection judges’ and there is more room for the ‘human dimension’, mentioning for example, the case law on the excusable exceeding of time-limits; Information received and in the context of the country visit to the Netherlands from the Council for the Judiciary. NJCM confirms this trend in pointing to the fact that this is snapshot of jurisprudence that needs further consolidation; Information received in the context of the country visit to the Netherlands from NJCM; Council of State, Lessons from childcare allowance cases, Reflection report of the Administrative Jurisdiction Division of the Council of State, November 2021. One of the conclusions was that in order to avoid injustice in the future, legal protection of citizens had to be given more importance vis-à-vis unity of the law and legal certainty.

launched another inquiry into respect by the tax authorities for the principle of equal treatment and non-discrimination in their approach to combat fraud²⁵⁸, notably through algorithmic decision-making²⁵⁹. In its conclusions presented on 26 February 2024, the Parliamentary Commission of Inquiry into Fraud Policy and Services pointed to the risk that an event like the child allowances affair could happen again as the underlying patterns are still present²⁶⁰ and drew up several recommendations, including introducing constitutional review, increasing the budget of the Data Protection Authority, making the Government legally accountable for discriminatory acts, and separating the Administrative Jurisdiction Division from the Council of State and transferring it to the judiciary²⁶¹. It acknowledged the need for Parliament itself to improve its capacity, legislative role, and information position vis-à-vis the Government²⁶². Several stakeholders concur with most of the recommendations²⁶³. As mentioned in the 2023 Rule of Law Report, a State Commission on the functioning of the rule of law²⁶⁴ with recommendations on structural changes that all state powers need to introduce to enhance the rule of law from a citizens' perspective was established. The State Commission presented its final Report on 10 June 2024, with ten proposals aimed at strengthening the legal protection of citizens²⁶⁵. While all three state powers have continued to engage in addressing the shortcomings resulting in the childcare allowances affair as notably identified by the Venice Commission²⁶⁶, many initiatives remain in the preparatory and adoption phase and further lessons continue to be drawn²⁶⁷. Also, despite efforts by the Government²⁶⁸, the process of compensating victims of the childcare allowances' affair is progressing slowly²⁶⁹. Therefore, there has been some further progress on the implementation of the recommendation made in the 2023 Rule of Law Report.

The Commission put forward the following recommendations: Show leadership on the rule of law and actively promote it. Strengthen the rule of law culture also with an office for the rule of law and an create an independent budget section for the rule of law; reinforce the rule of law compass within all parts of Government; give executive agencies the opportunity to show a red card; improve contact with citizens through understandable communication and adequate information; abolish the prohibition to review legislation against the Constitution; give long-term political priority to simplifying social welfare schemes; establish a legal basis for data sharing among government organisations to enable proactive government action in the citizen's interest; invest significantly in strengthening legal protection; organise administrative decision-making and the appeals procedure in such a way that citizens feel that they are heard and seen; ensure a review against legal principles by administrative courts. An official reaction of the new Government is awaited.

The Netherlands Institute for Human Rights continues to face governance issues. At present, due to governance issues reported in the 2023 Rule of Law Report and a related investigation²⁷⁰, the Netherlands Institute for Human Rights (NIHR), which is accredited with an A-status²⁷¹, is functioning with an interim-chairperson and only four out of the nine commissioners foreseen. The Ombudsman, as a member of the Advisory Board of the NIHR, expressed concerns about the impact on NIHR's capacity to effectively carry out its tasks²⁷². Despite these issues, the NIHR was tasked with the additional function of National Prevention Mechanism²⁷³, effective from 1 April 2024. In its function of Equality Body, it has continued to investigate on possible discrimination in relation to the childcare allowances affair²⁷⁴. The NIHR notably ruled in several cases that the actions of the Dutch Tax Authority resulted in indirect discrimination on the basis of race²⁷⁵. In addition, it undertook several awareness raising activities and trainings for civil servants to prevent racial discrimination by government agencies. Additional funding has been made available to cover for the extension of its mandate to National Prevention Mechanism.

On 1 January 2024, the Netherlands had five leading judgments of the European Court of Human Rights pending implementation, an increase of one compared to the previous year²⁷⁶. At that time, the Netherlands' rate of leading judgments from the past 10 years that remained pending was at 33% (compared to 29% in 2023), the average time that the judgments had been pending implementation is 3 years and 9 months (compared to 3 years and 7 months in 2023)²⁷⁷. The oldest leading judgment, pending implementation for 7 years, concerns the irreducibility of a life sentence imposed on a prisoner suffering from mental illness²⁷⁸. As regards the respect of payment deadlines, on 31 December 2023 there were no cases in total awaiting confirmation of payments (compared to 1 in 2022)²⁷⁹. On 1 July 2024, the number of leading judgments pending implementation had increased to eight²⁸⁰.

²⁶⁸ The Government acknowledges that the recovery operation takes too long for a number of parents. It has taken various measures to accelerate and improve the recovery operation aimed at speeding up the completion of the integral assessments and objections and the earlier and better provision of files; Input from the Netherlands for the 2024 Rule of Law Report, p. 21.

²⁶⁹ According to the Bar Association the Government will still need a lot of time to compensate all victims for the damage suffered and the promised new way of working by the Government has yet to prove itself in practice; Information received in the context of the country visit to the Netherlands from the Bar Association. According to the National Ombudsman, this is due to its original design not sufficiently responding to the needs of victims, too heavily relying on automated controls by ICT systems and not giving the executive agencies more powers to shape the recovery process; National Ombudsman, Offering recovery: A profession in its own right, A comparative study of ten recovery pathways, 23 October 2023.

The landscape for civil society organisations remains open, while some reported shortcomings regarding restrictions to the right to demonstrate remain. The Netherlands continues to have an open civil society landscape²⁸¹. The NIHR noted that the concerns it raised in previous years regarding the freedom of assembly and the freedom to protest had not been addressed and recommended that national authorities facilitate protests as much as possible and avoid using procedural requirements to impose content-based restrictions²⁸². CSOs reported further instances of alleged disproportionate preventive and repressive actions undertaken by the police²⁸³ and noted that different groups of protesters are not always treated equally²⁸⁴. On 19 April 2024 the Government sent a letter to Parliament outlining its policy on the right to demonstrate²⁸⁵. In addition, CSOs expressed concerns at initiatives

²⁸² The NIHR specifies that under the Dutch Public Assemblies Act planned assemblies needed to be pre-notified to the public authorities. Despite this being a procedural requirement allowing authorities to assess security risk and make timely arrangements to facilitate the protest, the NIHR submits that increasingly, there is a risk that the right to freedom of assembly gets subjected to content-based restrictions. The NIHR furthermore states that claims that restrictions are "necessary in a democratic society" should be subjected to stricter scrutiny; Contribution from ENNHRI for the 2024 Rule of Law Report, country chapter on the Netherlands, pp. 4-5.

²⁸⁵ Letter on the right to demonstrate, Ministers of the Interior and Security and Justice, 19 April 2024. In this letter, the Government announced its intention to have independent research carried out on the right to protest. This research will look into the category of 'disruptive' protests and the category of protests in which other fundamental rights or national security may be at stake. Making such a distinction was criticised by the putting perceived pressure on their independent role, such as the draft law on Transparency of CSOs²⁸⁶. They also expressed fear that their access to the court system will be made more difficult in the future due to the imposition of stricter admissibility requirements²⁸⁷.

²⁸⁷ Joint contribution from the Netherlands Helsinki Committee, Free Press Unlimited, Transparency International Nederland and NJCM for the 2024 Rule of Law Report, pp. 4, 23 referring to a motion adopted by the House of Representatives on 21 February 2023. On 4 April 2024, the Government responded to the motion emphasising the importance of access to justice for interest groups undertaking collective actions. It also mentioned that relevant Mass Damages in Class Actions Act (WAMCA), where the requirements for interest groups have been tightened, including the representativeness requirement will undergo an evaluation in the second half of 2024. The coalition agreement also refers to an investigation into the possibility to impose further representativeness requirements; Convention on access to information, public participation in decision-making and access to justice in environmental matters, Aarhus, 25 June 1998, article 9(3).
