Review of Trade and Sustainable Development provisions in trade agreements

AOB item requested by the Netherlands and supported by Belgium and Luxembourg for the FAC Trade (11 November 2021)

Trade policy provides the EU with a powerful instrument to promote open, rules based trade and sustainable development. Especially bilateral trade agreements can leverage sustainable development goals and the transition to a green economy. The EU has used its market power to engage in dialogue with third countries and obtain commitments that reinforce ambitions to mitigate climate change, improve labor rights and protect biodiversity.

Bilateral trade agreements are under scrutiny from various stakeholders, some of which raise concerns about sustainable development aspects. EU citizens have indicated that they see protection of the environment as a priority in the context of trade agreements. On the 21st of October the European Council spoke about the future of trade policy and the need for the EU to effectively conclude trade agreements. Trade and Sustainable Development provisions play an essential role in the ongoing discussion about the future of trade agreements.

In the Communication about the Trade Policy Review the European Commission committed to conducting an early review of the EU's approach to trade and sustainable development provisions<sup>1</sup> in 2021. This review is very timely, considering the current debate about trade agreements. In the context of this review, a comparative study is being executed by an external consultant. The inception report was published on the 23rd of September. Online public consultations for stakeholders will close by the end of November. The Commission organized a second Civil Society Dialogue with stakeholders on the 26th of October during which an update of the ongoing work was presented. Beginning of 2022 the final result of the review will be presented.

The Netherlands, Belgium and Luxembourg are committed to contributing to the review of the EU's approach to Trade and Sustainable Development provisions. Furthermore, we believe the Council should be involved in the review already in an early stage. Considering the timeframe for the review and ongoing discussions, the Foreign Affairs Council Trade in November is the right moment for the Commission to give its first impressions of the stakeholder consultation and update the Council on the process going forward. This would also provide Member States with an opportunity to share preliminary impressions and ideas based on their stakeholder consultations.
